certainly. I've been disadvantaged."

At one juncture Brown said, "It turns me off to even be bothered by those Washington papers, you know. For instance the New York Times put out a story saying I was pressuring people to give out loans, contracts, aid, grants to minorities. They came to talk to me, and I told them what I was doing, but they didn't print what I said."

"I said that from the day I got to the White House, if they wanted to know whether I made calls to see that blacks and poor whites were included in those processes, I told them, 'you're doggone right, I called, and I'd do it again, a thousand times, because before they didn't get any public help.'"

Brown said he'd be speaking Sunday at Roosevelt City, Ala., just outside Birmingham and would have "some stories to tell" about these matters.

women deliberated for about five hours Saturday night, recessing at midnight, and for about an hour and a half Sunday morning before returning a guilty verdict against the defendants.

The trial began Monday. The three defendants each testified that he had sexual relations with the woman, but said that she consented.

The victim, Miss Deborah Tozoe, who was called to the stand by the prosecution, and denied this. She said she feared for her life or that she would be injured.

The Supreme Court ruled last year that the death penalty was unconstitutional, but it did not rule on the legality of capital punishment itself.

Last January, the North Carolina Supreme Court ruled that the federal panel's decision should be interpreted as meaning that capital punishment is illegal where juries have the discretion to recommend either life imprisonment or death, but is legal where the death penalty is mandatory.

The state ruling made the death penalty mandatory for first-degree murder, first-degree rape, first-degree burglary and first-degree arson.

A Declaration on the Elimination of Discrimination Against Women was added in 1967, calling for measures to insure the equality between men and women in the areas of political activity, education, employment, civil law, and the family.

The Baha'i community of Durham observed this special anniversary Monday night at a meeting at which film strips were shown followed by a discussion.

The Baha'i world community has supported the basic aims of the United Nations to keep peace, to insure universal human rights, and to provide better social and economic conditions for humanity—since the creation of the world organization in 1945. Since early 1970 the Baha'i International Community, an office representing the Baha'i communities throughout the world, has office representing the Baha'i communities throughout the world, has exercised consultative status with the Economic and Social Council of the United Nations. It is one of the many non-governmental organizations in the world that has been granted this status. The Baha'i International Community maintains a full-time office, with an accredited international representative, in New York.

This calls for changes in the provincial attitudes and behavior of all the people in the world, Baha'is believe. The recognition that mankind belongs to one family, under one God, brings with it the responsibility to respect and to help one another in every way.

"We want to clear our good name. We want to prosecute those who have done wrong. We have and we will. And, we want to get back to work helping the small businessman," he told the Subcommittee.

Of immediate concern he said is the availability of funds for small business loans.

"We are not out of money yet on our loan programs for the majority business area," Kleppe said, citing tight money, high interest rates and the uncertainty in the banking community created by the recent charges against SBA as reasons for a slowdown in this type of loan application. He said funds for this program would probably last through January.

"In the minority section, however, we are going to run out before the end of the month," he declared and told the members "the burden is going to fall not on Tom Kleppe and not on SBA but on the minority businessman who will be denied the chance to get his entry into our free enterprise system."

have spoken out in favor of increased Black programming and employment in public television.

Rev. Jesse Jackson, President of Operation PUSH, testifying at the recent open meeting of the Corporation for Public Broadcasting (CPB) issued a strong demand for either civil rights or a separate system for Blacks in public broadcasting.

Congresswoman Yvonne Burke (D-Cal.), James Williams, Director of Communications of the National Urban League, Berkeley Burrell, President of the National Business League, and John Sullivan of the National Education Association were among those who also levied heavy protest to CPB. Sherman Briscoe, Executive Director of the National Newspaper Publishers Association requested that $6,500,000 be allocated by CPB for Black programming.

Because of CPB's failure to serve the needs of Black people, Tony Brown, the executive Producer of BLACK JOURNAL, announced a task force to study the formation of the Corporation for Blacks in Public Broadcasting. In addition, he called for several upcoming vacancies on the CPB board to be filled by Blacks and for 11 to 15% of the total CPB budget to be allocated for Black programs.

The Boston Tea Party

"CASTING TEA OVERBOARD IN BOSTON HARBOR" from Harper's New Monthly Magazine, December 1831, (Courtesy of Bostonian Society, Old State House, Boston, Massachusetts).

The Bicentennial has started! Many activities leading up to July 4, 1776 have already seen their 200th anniversaries come and go. One of the most famous events prior to the drafting of the Declaration of Independence. The Boston Tea Party, occurred in December of 1773, and Boston 200, the city's Bicentennial organization, is conducting a series of Tea Party related activities throughout this Fall, which will culminate during Tea Party Weekend, December 14-16. This will be the first major event of America's Bicentennial celebration, and a full schedule of commemorative festivities and activities is planned.

Speaking of the Tea Party and its relevance in this modern era, Boston Mayor Kevin H. White said, "A prime purpose in commemorating the event is to remind people of the principles about government that were enormously important to Bostonians of the 18th century. Although times have changed, these same issues of the role of government and the rights of man still continue to today."

Boston 200, the Office of the Boston Bicentennial, has sought to stimulate an active reconsideration of these issues through a series of forums, lectures and literary and artistic competitions — just as meetings and forums in 1773 kindled the spirit for the original Tea Party.

In mid-Fall, the Brig Beaver II, a 75' x 22', two-masted wooden brig, will sail into Boston Harbor from England and be located close to the original mooring area of the Tea Party ships. The Brig is a replica of the smallest of the three ships involved in the original Tea Party. Privately developed and financed as an educational and historical exhibit, Beaver II is the first Bicentennial exhibit to be recognized by Boston 200. The total exhibit will include a museum (privately sponsored) and a gift shop, which will be located in a former bricklayer's house adjacent to the mooring site.

Tea Party Weekend in mid-December will be filled with celebrations and activities which will bring together the functions which took place throughout the preceding months.

The Tea Party posters, prize-winners from two contests, one citywide and one nationwide, will be exhibited. The U. S. Custom House at Boston will be dedicated as an historic building. At historic Faneuil Hall, a forum will be held on the significance of the Boston Tea Party, followed by a reception for forum speakers and winners of a Tea Party Essay Contest held in the Fall for Boston area junior and senior high school students.

Saturday events will include an all-day Tea Party Tent Festival and an 18th century music concert at the Old South Meeting House. A Tea Party Ball, to be held at the Boston Center for the Arts, will benefit Boston 200 and create a 19th century evening for Bostonians and visitors. Guests will participate in 18th century and contemporary dancing; there will be a display of 18th century crafts; a fife and drum corps will perform. Attendees will also see the world premiere of "The Boston Tea Party," a historic revue created by the director of one of Boston's and New York's most popular improvisational theaters. Food and drink will be that of the Revolutionary Period.

The final day of the weekend will see an ecumenical service at the Old South Church, with a sermon developed from themes brought out in the Fall forums. A reception will be held in the afternoon for invited guests from the Council of the Thirteen Original States, Tea Party descendants, and representatives of other cities that had Tea Parties. These were: Charleston, South Carolina, Annapolis, Maryland, New York and Philadelphia, Pennsylvania.

At 2:00 in the afternoon, the Massachusetts National Guard, with the help of several Greater Boston militia companies, will participate in the mimes re-enactment of the Boston Tea Party on the Brig Beaver II. Rather than further polluting the Harbor by again dumping tea, Boston 200, in cooperation with the Sierra Club, will present an exhibit on ways in which America's waterways can be improved.

From October, 1973 through May, 1974, the Museum of the American China Trade, together with the Massachusetts Horticultural Society will present an exhibit of the teas of China, with emphasis on the importance of tea to the U.S. economy. A prestigious Boston jeweler has introduced a special Boston 200 commemorative teaspoon.

The official Bicentennial program in Boston begins on April 18, 1975 (Patriot's Day), but this year's commemoration of the Boston Tea Party is being held in accordance with the Office of the Boston Bicentennial's overall plans for Bicentennial celebrations.

The theme of Boston 200 is "The City" — highlighting landmarks and events in Boston's history, and the outstanding cultural, educational, and recreational resources available today.

The OBB views the Bicentennial as a catalyst for bringing new changes to the city through environmental improvements, development of cultural and educational resources, expansion of the existing garment industry, and the expansion of residents' awareness and appreciation of the city.
