HIGH BLOOD PRESSURE AFFECTS CHILDREN

Pediatric research has revealed that children, like adults can be afflicted with high blood pressure, the head of a new clinic at the University Hospital in Baltimore has reported.

"The new thing in young people is this primary hypertension," Dr. Edward J. Ruley, head of the Special Adolescent Hypertensive Clinic, said. "In the past, their hypertension was thought to be due to another cause, such as kidney, lung or heart problems."

More than 90 per cent of the children at the clinic, some as young as 10 years old, are being monitored and treated for high blood pressure in the three month old program. And doctors say it's the same kind of high blood pressure that affects adults and can lead to strokes, hearing, lung and eye diseases.

Dr. Ruley said the clinic has found blood pressure in excess of 150 over 100 quite high for children. He said in some cases the child is put on medication.

"We have to balance the side effects of medicine against the harmful effects of hypertension," Ruley said, noting that the use of drugs brings on side effects of tiredness, sleepiness and dizziness.

In an apparent effort to diagnose the problem early, some specialists are suggesting routine blood pressure tests for patients as young as three years. This comes after a number of clinics across the country have discovered children with hypertension.

Ruley said the ailment, which is most common among whites and blacks, was not detected in the past because doctors "weren't looking for it."

NEW IDEA FOR OBTAINING CANCER FACTS

Information on cancer and some other health subjects is now available over the telephone by tape recording to residents of the Richmond, Virginia metropolitan area. The call-in system, called Health-Line, is intended to encourage early diagnosis of cancer, and to provide information related to cancer in non-technical terms. It was developed at the Medical College of Virginia, Virginia Commonwealth University, under a grant from the National Cancer Institute.

The idea could be used for dissemination of cancer information in other communities throughout the country.

At present the system has 8 tapes, of which 10, dealing with such subjects as cancer chemotherapy and radiation side effects, are available only by prescription; the caller following the directions of his physician, must identify the tape by number or title.

The remainder of the tapes are available to any caller. Some contain information for patients at the college's hospital, such as visitor policy, discharges and patient's rights. The majority of the tapes, however, deal with cancer-related subjects both general and specific, including, for example, the seven warning signs of cancer, what a person with a lump in the breast should do, and discovery and treatment of cancer of the mouth.
