level. The Office of Education grant for that program is $39,000.

Dr. Ronald H. Brown will direct a program to provide master professional preparation in physical education for the handicapped. The grant supporting Dr. Brown's program is $35,000 from the Office of Education.

AFTERMATH WANTS TO HEAR FROM YOU

In Case of Rape, or Attempted Rape,

Call 800-432-6830

If you've ever been raped, or the victim of an attempted rape, call 800-432-6830; Aftermath wants to hear from you.

For the first time in North Carolina, authorities hope to determine the actual number of rapes and other sexual assaults in the state, thanks to a $25,000 federal grant made recently to the N. C. Council on the Status of Women.

The grant, from Comprehensive Employment and Training Act (CETA) funds, makes possible a four-month survey of all women who have ever been the victims of sexual assault, regardless of when it took place.

Beginning July 25, victims of rape or attempted rape or other sexual assaults are asked to call the Aftermath office toll free, and without giving their names, answer a few general questions, such as whether they reported the attack; if not, why; whether they knew the attacker; under what circumstances the attack occurred; what type of medical assistance they received at the time; whether their alleged attacker was ever brought to trial; and their own feelings about the aftermath of the incident.

Miriam J. Dorsey, executive director of the Council on the Status of Women, said no statistics are now available on unreported rapes in North Carolina. "We have no way of knowing the extent of the problem of rape," she said, "because many women may not report their attacks. The reports may just be the tip of the iceberg."

Last year, according to the N. C. Police Information Network, 600 actual rapes were reported, in addition to 207 attempted rapes. Other attempted rapes may be reported simply as an attack or an assault on a female, which are lesser charges. "The survey will help us substantiate the extent of the problem we have here," said Ms. Dorsey.

In addition, to establishing a more accurate count of sexual assaults, and attempted assaults, project administrators hope to find out reasons why the incidents are not always reported. In turn, they hope to create a more positive attitude toward reporting, thus eventually limiting this type of crime.

Although Aftermath is a survey and not a counseling service, rape victims needing help will be referred to other agencies which do offer this service.
