WARREN COUNTY

Warren County is faced by North Carolinians, the group called for unity in the opposition to the PCB disposal. In a statement released this week, the organization cited the dangers of the cancer causing chemical and its threat to life and health to the population of Warren and surrounding counties as its reason for the joining the fight. There is a very real threat of both air and water contamination that would remain with us for years. If Japanese who ate PCB poisoned cooking oil ten years ago are afflicted with disfiguring acne, swollen limbs, runny and red eyes, stomach and liver problems, and anemia, what will happen to the population of Warren County if this dangerous chemical gets into the water supply. Most people in the area rely on wells for water.

Also attending the meeting of the commissioners was Planning Director Floyd B. McKissick, Jr., of Soul City, who cited dangers of contamination. Warren County's population is predominately black. The county is rural for the most part. The oceans and their adjacent seas cover nearly three-fourths of the earth's surface, or about 140,500,000 square miles.

Life, Work of Black Slave Poet Being Attempted

GREENSBORO — A national exhibit on the life and work of Moses Horton, a famous black slave poet of Chatham County, is being attempted by the Association for the Study of North Carolina Heritage located here.

Announcement of the project was made this week by Mrs. Mildred Payton director of the Association which is seeking funding from the National Endowment.

The year-old organization has established a Black History Museum on the Chatham County fairgrounds in an authentic slave cabin. Also ASNCH has developed an inter-school black history library, an exhibition saluting the Black Press, and has sponsored the first annual George Moses Horton Day.

Horton, the first black in America to earn his living by writing and selling his poetry, was born in the county in 1797. He began writing poetry as a slave boy. His work soon received recognition throughout the county, and before his death at 86, he had turned out volumes of verse that made him the most famous North Carolina poet during his era.
