Blacks In U.S. to Use Their Influence to End Apartheid in Africa

RALEIGH — The Nigerian ambassador to the United Nations urged blacks in the U.S. to use their influence to end apartheid in South Africa. Ambassador Leslie O. Harriman urged blacks into action during a speech at the 112th Convocation ceremony of St. Augustine's College.

"I believe that with the leverage black people of this country could have and should exploit...we should be able to hhave the U.S. transporting value systems of this country to Africa and show they govern foreign policy," he said. Harriman praised St. Augustine's College for its policy of admitting large numbers of African students at the predominantly black Episcopal Church supported college. Harriman also praised a colleague at the United Nations, black Ambassador to the U.N. representing the U.S., Andrew Young.

"I think Andrew Young, in the role he plays, symbolizes what blacks can accomplish," said Harriman. "His ability in breaking through the color barrier in the United States is to us in Africa very significant," the Ambassador continued.

Senior Recital to Be Given at NCCU

On Sunday, February 25, at 4 p.m., two students will present their Senior Recital in B.N. Duke Auditorium, which is located on Fayetteville Street near the intersection with Lawson Street. Admission is free, and the public is invited to attend.

The two students, Miss Naomi Taylor, Soprano, who is a student of Mrs. Gwendolyn Haskins of the NCCU Music Department Faculty, and Barry Johnson, Tenor, who is a student of Dr. Gene Strassler, Chairman of the NCCU Music Department.

Miss Taylor, is from Blanch, N.C., and is a graduate of Bartlett Yancey High school will be accompanied by Michael McIver, himself a graduate of NCCU. She will perform works by Stravinsky, Wolf Faure, Koepke (of the NCCU Music Dept. Coleridge-Taylor, and William Grant Still.

Johnson, is from Durham and who is a graduate of Durham High School, will be accompanied by Benjamin Keaton of the NCCU Music Department Faculty. He will perform works by Handel, Haydn, Torelli, Quiter, Lalo, Britten and Hageman.

Both students will collaborate on a duet by Tom Jones and Harvey Schmidt.

Howard Museum Culminates 67-Year Dream

WASHINGTON — The culmination of a 67-year dream was celebrated at Howard University Saturday with the dedication of its museum.

The idea of a museum at Howard began with Dean Kelly Miller in 1912 when he proposed a "Negro-Americana" Museum and Library. The Library was started in 1914 when Dr. Jesse Moorland donated his large collection of Afro-American books to the university. The Arthur Spingarn collection was added later.

Some 45 years ago, a study committee was appointed at the university to conceptualize the museum. The committee's deas materialized last week with the dedication ceremony.

Speakers included: Dr. James E. Cheek, president of Howard; Dr. Michael R. Winston, director of the Moorland-Spingarn Research Center in which the Museum is housed; Dr. Dorothy Porter, curator of the center for more than 40 years; Dr. Rayford W. Logan, chairman of the history department for many years; and Dr. Lorraine Williams, university vice president.

Acting Curator Thomas C. Battle says the museum will always have on display items of university memorabilia and African or African-American material.

The present display included: Photographs of the university during the formative years, Baule mask from the Ivory Coast, Bente cloth from Ghana, an Ife Janus sculptured head from Nigeria, and Gio anklets and bracelets from Liberia.
