

MOTORISTS ARE URGED TO REPORT GASOLINE PRICE VIOLATIONS

The Department of Energy's toll-free hot line for consumer complaints on gasoline and heating oil prices and supplies has been given new emphasis following the loss of oil from Iran.

reason to believe that he or she was charged more than the legal price for gasoline should call the hot line," advises Ms. Helen Rollins, Deputy Administrator of the Economic Regulatory Administration (ERA).

"We must rely on the assistance of the public in preventing unjustified price increases by firms seeking to take advantage of the current tightening gasoline supply situation. The situation is potentially acute due to the loss of Iranian oil and the relatively high demand for gasoline."

The toll-free number to call is: (800)424-9264. The hot line is open 8 a.m. to 4:30 p.m., Monday through Friday.

The petroleum pricing and allocation regulations in effect since 1973 require that the current maximum legal selling price for gasoline be displayed on the pump. That price is determined on the basis of gasoline prices in May, 1973 with certain adjustments permitted to reflect increased costs, such as for crude oil.

Failure to display the current ceiling price or selling gasoline at a price above the ceiling could result in civil penalties of up to $2,500 per violation for each day the violation occurs. In the case of willful violations, the penalty is up to $10,000 per day for each violation.

SOLID WASTE AS FUEL STUDIED IN PIEDMONT TRIAD

If you live in the Piedmont Triad, garbage may one day help to light and heat your home.

The U.S. Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) is spending $27,000 to see if cities in this area of North Carolina can convert solid wastes into a marketable fuel. DSI Resource Systems of Boston is expected to complete the study for EPA by June.

Solid waste—paper, food, yard wastes, and other recoverable materials—has a heating value of about half that of coal and has been increasing as the composition of our refuse changes. The use of solid waste as a supplemental fuel to coal in electric power plants is already commercially operational in some American cities and appears to be well suited to existing institutional arrangements. DSI has said that Duke Power Company's Belew's Creek Steam Station near Winston-Salem could be a prime market for processed wastes now going into landfills.

Presently, Winston-Salem buries garbage in its city landfill for about $3 to $3.50 per ton, while DSI estimates the cost of processing garbage into marketable fuel would range from $10 to $12 a ton. But with rising energy and land costs, converting solid waste into fuel instead of burying it in a landfill may be economically feasible in five to ten years.
