BOYCOTT CALLED ON WARREN MERCHANTS

The Warren County Political Action Council met on Monday, November 24, and voted unanimously to boycott all non-black merchants in the county and all Roses Stores. The decision came in the wake of a crisis in the community which developed after the local Board of Education hired Benjamin Terrell of Scotland Neck as the principal of the new consolidated high school.

About 100 citizens from the black community appeared before the Board of Education at its meeting on November 10 at the fact that it had hired Terrell, a white, instead of James Wilkerson, a black, as principal of the new school. Student population at the school will be at least eighty per cent non-white.

New Principal 'Totally Unaccepted' to Blacks

"The real issue here is not that Terrell is a white man," said a spokesman for the group. "The board established a policy of hiring from within the system when the superintendent, Michael Williams, was hired. Even though there were black candidates for the position who had superior credentials, the Board gave as its reason for hiring Williams, a desire to promote from within the Warren County system. We just feel like they changed the rules in the middle of the game because Wilkerson, a black, was the next man in line for the job."

The Political Action Council had given the Board fifteen days to respond to the charge that Terrell was "totally unaccepted" to the black community and must, therefore, be replaced. As of the time of the meeting, no response had been received from the Board, although several members indicated that one had been drafted.

Over fifty members of the group were present at the Monday meeting. The general feeling was that the merchants in Warren County supported the actions of the Board and that the members of the black community had no other choice than to show their displeasure with the unfair hiring policies of the board.

Forty Million Dollar Lawsuit To Go To Trial March 16

NEW YORK—The socialist Workers Party charged recently that the government is secretly carrying out an investigation of the party despite assurances by the Attorney General that the investigation had been called off. Andrew Pulley, the SWP's presidential candidate in November elections asserted that his party is presently the target of an FBI "foreign counterintelligence" operation in which SWP members are subject to warrantless wire-tapping, burglaries, and electronic surveillance.

"In the upcoming trial of our $40 million lawsuit against government harassment we are asking the Court to order the FBI to halt this illegal investigation," Pulley said. The trial is scheduled to begin March 16 in New York.

Seeks Nominations for Awards to Women

Often women play the supportive roles in their careers and social and home lives; not assuming any "limelight" for their outstanding achievements. This has gone on far too long.

Annually, the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People recognizes these "Unsung Heroines" by giving tribute with the

"NAACP Women's Award."

Thirty-three extraordinary women were recognized in 1980 at the first NAACP Women's Conference, held in New York. Women like Minnie Johnson, retired educator of South Carolina, past vice president of the NAACP and involved in numerous other civic organizations; Laura Banks, active community leader from Tucson, Arizona; and the Honorable Wynona M. Lipman, the highest elected black official in New Jersey and the only woman and the only black serving in the New Jersey Senate were honored with this award.

Perhaps you know of an "Unsung Heroine." If so, submit nominations of women who have been outstanding forces in any of these categories: Arts and Sciences, Education, Government, Homemaker, Law Labor Unions, Community and Civic Volunteer, International Affairs, Business Education, Engineering, Health Services, Household Technician and Religion.

Nominations must be submitted in the form of a double-spaced, typewritten explanation of 200 words or less and sent to: NAACP Sustainer Program, 131 N. Ludlow Street, Suite 260 Talbott Tower, Dayton, Ohio 45402. Photos, news clippings, citations or other documents will not be accepted. All entries must be postmarked by February 20, 1981.

Nominees for these awards must plan to attend the 1981 NAACP Women's Conference in Cincinnati, May 1-2, 1981 where the awards will be conferred.

Recognitions must be given to those who deserve it!

For more information contact: Lynnette M. Heard, Public Relations Coordinator, Talbott Tower, Suite 260; 131 N. Ludlow Street, Dayton, Ohio 45402; (513) 222-9852 or -9857.

The Danforth Foundation, established in 1927, is a national, educational, philanthropic organization, dedicated to enhancing the humane dimensions of life. Its activities traditionally have emphasized the theme of improving the quality of teaching and learning.

Today, the foundation serves the following areas: higher education primarily through sponsorship of programs administered by the staff, precollegiate education through grant-making and program activities, and urban education in metropolitan St. Louis through grant-making and program activities.

Mr. and Mrs. William H. Danforth, who established the foundation, along with their daughter and son, Dorothy Danforth Compton and Donald Danforth, maintained active leadership roles in the affairs of the foundation throughout their lifetimes. Family members continue to be involved in foundation activities through participation on the foundation's board of trustees.

John O. Hodges, Assistant Dean of University Students, will coordinate the Danforth-Compton Fellowship program at the University.

U. of Chicago Announces Minority Fellowships

CHICAGO — New fellowships will be available for minority students undertaking graduate studies next year at the University of Chicago.

Under the terms of a Danforth Foundation grant which could total $300,000, the University will provide financial assistance to "outstanding black, Mexican-American, Native American, and Puerto Rican students who are committed to careers in college and university teaching."

From the initial grant of $150,000, Dorothy Danforth Compton Fellowships will provide recipients with full tuition and fees, plus $5,000 a year for living expenses, for up to three years. As a supplement, the Danforth Foundation will set aside an additional $30,000 annually to fund activities enhancing the academic life of the fellows.

Such activities might include: seminars and workshops on campus designed around the particular interests of the fellows, counseling of fellows by distinguished minority scholars on campus, and meeting with similarly-funded fellows at other universities.

The University is one of ten institutions of higher learning, and the only one from the Midwest, designated by the foundation to participate in the fellowship program.

The St. Louis-based foundation will award another $150,000 to extend the grant three additional years, through 1986, to institutions who are making satisfactory progress "toward achieving the purposes of the grant."

Applicants may apply to any one of the University's four graduate divisions: biological sciences, humanities, physical sciences and social sciences. The University will waive, upon request, the usual $20 application fee to encourage applications from outstanding minority students.

The deadline for admission and financial aid, January 15, 1981, will be extended for the late applicants to the Danforth-Compton fellowship program "if all their credentials have been received by February 15," reports

300 High School Students Take Part In Minority Visitation Day at NCSU

More than 300 high school students from across the state participated in a Minority Visitation Day at North Carolina State University Saturday (November 22).

The all-day orientation sponsored by NCSU's Office of Admissions was headed by Ms. Jill Jones, an assistant director of admissions, and Reginald Fennell, an admissions and financial aid counselor.

According to Jones, the program is part of an ongoing introduction of the state's black high school students to the outstanding facilities and academic opportunities available at North Carolina State.

"Our hopes are that the students who visited our campus today will attend NCSU next fall," Jones said. "The aim is to have fine students like this group enroll at NCSU, graduate, then join the ranks of our successful alumni."

The morning session offered information on NCSU opportunities in academics, student life and financial aid.

Ronald C. Butler, NCSU's associate dean of student affairs, welcomed the students by describing the day of visitation as one that should make them feel at home at N.C. State.

"We believe NCSU is one of the finest universities in the country. We will be showing you things today that will be quite impressive but there won't be any pressure applied," he said. "Your education and your future will require some important decisions, ones that we won't try to make for you."

Mrs. Anna P. Keller, director of admissions at NCSU, spoke to the visitors about minority applications and University life.

"We have received over 400 minority applications and are running well ahead of the same time last year," Mrs. Keller said. "We hope you'll want to come to NCSU, too. If you do, you'll find it to be a warm place, not nearly as frightening as you thought."

Following the formal introduction to University life, the students talked with professors and students from the NCSU undergraduate schools and various activity groups.

The afternoon session included a minority faculty and staff presentation, a campus tour, an entertainment from the black NCSU choral group, the New Horizon.

A student mixer in the University Student Center ended the day of orientation.

"We had an outstanding turnout today, good students representing all areas of North Carolina," Ms. Jones said. "We are encouraged by their enthusiasms and look forward to having them join the NCSU community next fall."

Durham Native Participates In Speech-Language Hearing Confab

ROCKVILLE, MD. — Dr. Elizabeth (Betty) Bell Young, Congressional Staff Aid, U.S. House of Representatives-Office of Congressman Walter E. Fauntroy, recently participated in the annual National Convention of the American Speech-Language Hearing Association held in Detroit. The Durham (NC) native was one of 58 members of the organization recognized as Fellows by the Association during the Detroit meeting.

According to the Committee on Honors, a Fellow "shall be active in the Association and shall have a record of sustained achievement in one or more of the following areas: original contributions to the advancement of knowledge; distinguished educational, professional or administrative activity; and outstanding service to the association."

Participants at the four-day meeting heard reports on the latest developments in research on disorders of human speech, language and hearing. More than 800 papers and proposals were presented at the Convention on topics such as voice restoration by the use of windpipe "puncture"; the current treatment of stuttering; effects of drugs on the sound of voice; communication of the aging; grammatic structure of black child language; and the use of hearing aids and other services for the deaf and hard of hearing.

The Convention's luncheon address was delivered by educator and entertainer, Susan Long, Ph.D., best known worldwide as "Susan," a principal character and host on the Children's Television Workshop program, "Sesame Street." She discussed the effects of television on the learning functions of children. Ms. Long, a graduate of The University of Massachusetts School of Education, was a classroom teacher in Detroit and New York City.
