NCCU Observes Black History With A Month Full Of Activities

North Carolina Central University is observing Black History Month, February 1-28. The national theme provided by the Association for the Study of Afro-American Life and History is "Black History: A Role Model for Youth."

The program includes exhibits, lectures, panel discussions, films, plays and music recitals. The Black History Month celebration is made possible by grants from Chancellor Albert N. Whiting's office, the Forum Committee, Student Union, Student Affairs office, and Student Government. It is being coordinated by the History and Social Science Department.

Exhibits will include a portrait display of black Americans in the James E. Shepard Memorial Library; art works of NCCU alumni, Dan Eurbanks and Walt Davis in the Alfonso Elder Student Union; and selections from the Afro-American Collection, First Gallery, Museum of Art, all on the NCCU campus.

An almost daily schedule of speakers has been assembled. Among them are Mrs. Rosa Parks, "Mother of the Civil Rights Movement"; Bishop Alfred G. Dunston, presiding prelate of the Second Episcopal District, AME Zion Church; and, Gerald Gill, a noted author.

Mrs. Parks will appear in B.N. Duke Auditorium on Tuesday, February 10, at 7:30 p.m. In 1955, Mrs. Parks refused to move to the back of the bus sparking the Montgomery, Alabama bus boycott. He will speak on "Fulfilling the American Promise" in the Student Union on February 12 at 7 p.m.

Gerald Gill's observations of the political scene in America are treated in his book, Meanness Mania (1980). He attributes "meanness mania" to a country preoccupied with self, nationality, inflation, etc. Gill, a sensitive and concerned Afro-American, presently teaches at Tufts University. He will speak on "Black Historians and Public Policy: The Historian as Advocate" in the Student Union Rooms 146-146-A on February 20 at 11 a.m.

Boeing Completes 500th 747

More than 8,000 Boeing employees and guests attended ceremonies marking roll-out of the 500th 747 from the huge Everett Division factory. First of the superjets was rolled from the same factory on September 30, 1968. The big 747s now have carried more than 300 million passengers, have been in the air for some nine million revenue flight hours and have flown more than four billion miles. Boeing President Malcolm Stamper remarked that "just as the 500th is better than the first, the 1,000th will be better than the 500th." Continuing advances in technology have made today's 747s more versatile and economical than the original 747s, he said. From the 710,000 pounds gross weight of the 747 of 12 years ago, today's 747s have maximum takeoff weights of up to 833,000 pounds and Freighter versions regularly carry as much as 250,000 pounds of payload. Some 747s used in domestic Japanese service seat up to 550 passengers, and the SP (Special Performance) version flies the world's longest non-stop airline routes, such as New York to Tokyo. This 500th 747 will be delivered to Scandinavian Airlines System (SAS). SAS Executive Vice President Bjorn Tornblom represented his company at the special ceremony.
