Stanford L. Warren: An Historic Landmark

Part II

By Trelle L. Jeffers

The Stanford L. Warren Public Library, located at 1201 Fayetteville St., was founded for the purpose of supplying educational services to Durham's black community. It is located approximately four blocks from North Carolina Central University, one block from Lincoln Hospital (now Lincoln Community Health Center), five blocks from Hillside High School, two blocks from old Whitted Junior High School, walking distance from two elementary schools, across the street from what was once the Harriet Tubman YWCA and situated near several churches.

The library was thus a cultural center for Durham's black community and it served in addition to keep Durham's black citizens informed on its growth, and it was a center to celebrate the accomplishments of blacks.

Since the library's consolidation with the Durham Public Library in the late 1960's, it has remained a neighborhood branch because of its size and service and because it is more than a mile from the main library, which makes it difficult for many of Durham's young black readers to obtain adequate educational materials.

Thus, the Stanford L. Warren Public Library continues to offer the following services:

—The Adult Department which includes a large collection of reference books and periodicals, including twenty different newspapers and several magazines, many of which are about blacks. This section also includes records, cassettes, copy machines, vertical file material and college catalogs.

—An extensive black collection which was started at the Durham Colored Library in an attempt to gather all books that dealt with black people written by black authors.

—The Early Childhood Resource Center for parents and teachers, which offers approximately 200 recordings, 300 study prints, 100 toys, sixty games, 300 filmstrips and fifty wonder puzzles.

—Key Korner (Children's Room), which offers children's books on a six-week loan to teachers in day care centers to be used over an extended period of time.

—Play and Learn, an extended program designed to acquaint parents and children, ages 3-5, with services available to preschoolers.

—Story Hour, a program for 3-5 year olds, which consists of stories, films or film strips. Its purpose is to develop listening and communication skills in young children.

—Summer Reading Program, a club designed to motivate children to read by offering them awards or recognition for reading a large number of books.

—Library Orientation, a program which offers information on the library to community groups such as the Girl and Boy Scouts. The branch librarians also visit schools periodically to inform teachers and pupils of available services.

The library also offers community organizations the service of its multipurpose room for weekly or monthly meetings.

For days and times of available services at the Stanford L. Warren Public Library, one should call 688-8027 or visit the library, Monday through Friday, 9 a.m. to 9 p.m., and Saturdays, 9 a.m. to 6 p.m.

The 'Enforcer'

while collecting 21 points and eight rebounds, and his MEAC Tournament semi-finals against North Carolina Central, 18 points and 14 rebounds.

There were also nights in which, because of foul trouble, Terry played than half the contest. On those nights, his teammates struggled.

Terry's only real shortcoming has been his propensity to get into early foul trouble. That may have been attributable to his inexperience. Rumor has it that when "J.T." visited the Howard campus as a high school senior, he was 6 feet 6 inches tall. However, when enrolled at the University the following year, Terry had grown four inches.

Thus, he had two adjustments to make.

Terry's strength is his offensive rebounding which is aided by his ability and mobility. His follow up slam dunks have helped the Bison earn their nickname of "The Dunk Patrol". This season, Terry has also become an effective shot blocker and intimidator. His 18 blocks in just 13 games has surpassed last year's total of 14.

"My role is mainly just to be the enforcer," said the soft-spoken Cleveland, Ohio native. "I feel that I can help out the team best with my defense and clogging up the middle. Right now, I figure that I'm reaching my goal as far as defense."

Howard, picked as the pre-season favorite to repeat as MEAC champion, began the season with three straight road losses. "I felt that by us opening on the road, it was going to be rough for us, but I also felt that if we took them in stride, we could go unbeaten."

"The five losses that we have suffered aren't a let-down. They have just opened our eyes to what is needed to accomplish our goals."
