

Charles Daye—NCCU Prof

ward Bishop
When Charles Daye was growing up in rural North Carolina he did not know a single lawyer and certainly was not familiar with any law professors. One evening in 1958, his mother took him to a PTA meeting where he heard Lloyd McKissick, a lawyer and frequently National Executive Director of the Congress of Racial Equality and founder of Soul City, speak. That was the spark that lit the flame.

"Who is that man?" Daye asked his mother.

"She told me that he was a lawyer and I decided right then, back in 1958, that I was going to become a lawyer."

Daye, a visiting professor of Torts and Housing and Community Development at North Carolina Central University School of Law in Durham, believes that "law is not for everyone." Professor Daye insists that "only those people who want to serve others should go to law school. It is a powerful profession. It requires discipline and clear thinking."

Daye believes that young people who want to become lawyers should start preparing themselves in junior high school. "They should read everything they can get their hands on and they should be prepared for hard work."

A graduate of North Carolina Central University and Columbia University's Law School, Daye is well liked by students and his fellow faculty members.

"He really expects 100 percent of you in the classroom," said one first year student who is taking his torts class. "I don't mind the pressure he puts on us because he puts a lot of pressure on himself. I think that he has read some of the cases as many as 50 times."

Daye's course in Housing and Community Development is well liked by students. Not only do students from North Carolina Central University take it, but students from the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill travel ten miles three times a week to hear his lectures. A textbook that he and several other professors authored on Housing will soon be published.

When the book is published it will be one of the primary works in the field of housing. Daye says, "I am really looking forward to its publication. It has been a long and difficult struggle."

While at Columbia,

Daye thought of practicing international or corporate law. "I had the opportunity to work during the summers with Wall Street Law firms, and I saw the possibility of making a lot of money." But in 1967, blacks in Watts rioted and in 1968 Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr., was killed. "Those events raised my consciousness about national problems. I decided to drop the idea of becoming an international lawyer or diplomat and decided to return to North Carolina to see just how I could help out with some of my state's problems about which I was familiar from participation in the sit-ins in the early 60's."

Daye, who has been teaching law for nearly ten years says that young blacks should not be afraid of competition in Law School. "It requires the ability to work hard and make some personal sacrifices," he said. "When I first went to Columbia, I was scared as a jack rabbit in a fox den." "I had come from a poor black family, and from the rural south. I just had to keep pushing myself. I started on one day never gave up."

"Clear thinking is at a premium," says Daye, "the law allows you to train your mind. Lawyers know the system. They know where the pressure points are. They know when to touch them and they know when to leave them alone."

Aside from his academic work, Daye is heavily involved in the Durham community. He is a member of the Durham Committee on the Affairs of Black People, and the North Carolina Association of Black Lawyers.

"Community Service is very important," Daye says, "those of us who have had the opportunity to become lawyers owe our communities a tremendous debt. But for many of the people who struggled for me, I would not have not have even had the opportunity to study law. Every lawyer should spend some time in community service."

Fayetteville Happenings

By Mrs. T.H. Kinney

Hello Hearts!! Win someone's heart on Valentine's Day by sending them flowers, cards, candy or fruits.

You can see and enjoy "1776" at Fort Bragg Playhouse; "Raft On The River" at Methodist College; "The Member of the Wedding" at the Fayetteville Little Theater and "Sound of Music" at the Bordeaux Dinner Theater. Also National Brotherhood special program of "People Caring For People" at Fayetteville State University on Sunday at 2 p.m.

Cardinal Savings and Loan Inc. of Fayetteville is being reorganized following the 1979 death of Dr. Claude Stephens, Jr., former chairman of the board of directors of the institution. Wilson A. Lacy has been named the new chief executive officer and subscriptions are now being sold at $10 per share. Stock will be sold until July 1, and plans call for reopening in December, 1981. Lacy, a former vice president of United National Bank and former branch manager and loan officer of Southern National Bank, is a 1977 graduate of the North Carolina School of Banking. He is a native of Bladenboro. Cardinal is one of the few minority-owned savings and loans in North Carolina.

The Fayetteville Area Chamber of Commerce and Center for Educational Study at Fayetteville State University are sponsoring a contest for area elementary teachers. An award will be presented in March to the winning teacher who has demonstrated "excellence and creativity in teaching free enterprise and economics concepts" in her class. Any fourth through sixth grade teachers may submit applications by Feb. 15 to their Social Studies supervisors. This is a "first" in this effort. Its objectives are to: recognize outstanding teachers in economic education; promote creativity and improve economic education teaching practices, etc. A workshop will be held on Wednesday, 8:30-3:30, on the campus.

Members of La Madrina Toastmistress Club held their regular meeting on Monday night at the home of the president, Mrs. N.L. McLain.

Floyd L. Shorter, assistant vice president of United Virginia Bank, has been selected president and chief executive officer of United National Bank here.

A native of Eufula, Alabama, Shorter has an MBA from Old Dominion University and is a retired U.S. Army captain who received the Bronze Star in Vietnam. He has served as an instructor in business and marketing at Norfolk State University, is a member of the board of directors of the National Business League, a Martin Luther King Fellow and was named to the Outstanding Young Men of America of 1978.

The Door Committee of the Blue Revue held a meeting on Thursday past at the home of Mrs. S.L. Burton.

Brotherhood Sunday was observed on Sunday evening by a joint musical service presented by Fayetteville area black and white Baptist churches. Scripture readings and prayers were included.

Participating male chorus groups were from the host church, First Baptist Church, Moore Street; Cape Fear Baptist Church, LaFayette Baptist Church, Mt. Pisgah Baptist Church and Lewis Chapel Baptist Church under the direction of John McQueen of the host church. Harry Campbell, Calvin Smith, D.P. Stiles, Dr. A.C. Jones and the Rev. J.J. Fulk, representing the associations; and the Rev. Ronald Loftis, a planning leader.
