PATRICK BALTAZAR's father, Russell (l) and friends of the Baltazar family sit quietly inside St. Anthony's Church as they attend the funeral, February 17, for the 11-year-old youth who was the 16th black child to be found slain. UPI Photo

Distraught classmates of JEFFREY MATHIS, another victim of Atlanta's children slayings, carry his coffin to the gravesite, February 21. On the eve of Mathis's funeral, police were mounting an intensive search for CURTIS WALKER, at that time missing less than 24 hours, the list of Atlanta's missing children grew to 20 with the addition of WALKER and AARON WYCHE. UPI Photo

Mrs. Barbara Heard, mother of TERMAL R. HEARD, who failed to come home the night of February 24, sits in her small apartment the next day after returning from an extensive search with Atlanta police detectives. Termal and another boy, DEMPSTER D. WILLIAMS, both failed to return to their home that night. UPI Photo

Friends and relatives of PATRICK BALTAZAR file past his casket during rosary services at the Glenmora St. Louis Catholic Church. The youth was buried in Arnaudville, La. UPI Photo

Lee Gooch, 15, who was nearly on the list of missing and killed Atlanta black children, talks on telephone in Tallahassee, Florida as he waits in the office of the County Sheriff to be picked up and returned home. UPI Photo

Mrs. Ramona Rainey of Philadelphia shows off her green ribbon that she has just bought at a flower stand. People in Philadelphia are buying and wearing green ribbons to express sympathy for the parents and children in Atlanta. Twenty black children have been killed or have disappeared in the past nineteen months.
