MEDICAL JOURNAL

More than 12 percent of all pregnancies end in miscarriage, according to a recent radio broadcast sponsored by the Columbia-Presbyterian Medical Center and the Prudential Insurance Co.

Dr. Anthony Labrum, Associate Professor of Obstetrics, Gynecology, and Psychiatry at the University of Rochester Medical School, says miscarriages often have serious psychological effects on women.

Dr. Labrum explains, "Many women agonize over what they did to produce a miscarriage. They think of all the things they've done — medicines they've taken, reaching up, exercising."

Dr. Labrum says it's nearly impossible to disrupt a normal, healthy pregnancy through physical exertion or trauma. Most miscarriages that occur during the first three months of pregnancy are, in fact, due to genetic irregularities or defects in the fetus.

Dr. Labrum says, "About 60 percent of miscarried babies we see under the microscope have abnormal chromosomes."
