NEWS OF HEALTH

Important Medical Developments

Many black Americans are learning more about their health because of a helpful pamphlet which answers many questions about cancer.

Recent medical studies show black Americans are getting more cancer of some forms than before, and a black American is more likely to die from cancer than is a white American. Black women, however, are not getting cancer as much now as in the past.

According to the pamphlet—What Black Americans Should Know About Cancer—there are basic reasons for the higher incidence of cancer in blacks: * Environmental and social factors are a major cause of increased cancer among blacks. More blacks than whites live in cities and crowded industrial areas which have a greater percent of cancer-causing pollutants in the air.

In general, says the pamphlet, "Blacks have had less access to regular medical care, and have not taken advantage of medical facilities that are available."

The pamphlet, published by the Public Health Service, says the findings point to a need by black Americans to pay attention to their bodies and see a doctor when they suspect they may be developing cancer. Here are some of the warning signs listed in the pamphlet:

A persistent cough or long-lasting breathing problem; a lump or thickening of the breast (in women);

Environmental factors are believed to play a large part in cancer among black Americans, change in bowel habits and bleeding from the rectum or blood in the stool; difficulty urinating or blood in the urine; unusual bleeding or discharge from the vagina; a sore in the mouth or throat that doesn't heal, hoarseness, or difficulty in swallowing; indigestion that won't go away.

The pamphlets "What Black Americans Should Know About Cancer," "Progress Against Breast Cancer," and "Clearing the Air" and others concerning cancer are available free of charge from the Public Health Service. Write to: Office of Communications, Dept. K, National Cancer Institute, Building 31, Room 10A18, Bethesda, MD 20205.
