

FIGHTING FOR THEIR "LIGHTS"

For many blind or near-blind persons, the dog guide can be a little like a light in the darkness. The dog helps them increase their freedom—freedom to travel independently and to earn a living, to become in-some cases, taxpayers instead of burdens on their families or society.

Lions Clubs International, an organization of service-minded men who want to serve their communities without reward, urge people who control public facilities to permit dog guides to enter. Lions Clubs programs contribute substantially to dog guide schools as part of their public service.

The dog guide—sometimes called the seeing-eye or leader dog—is a thoroughly trained professional. It is at home in even the most crowded or noisy situation.

In a restaurant, the dog will lie quietly at its owner's feet. In a crowded elevator it will sit alertly waiting for the door to open.
