HYDRO
chairman of the Chamber of Commerce Economic Development Committee also gave welcoming remarks.

Riley said his company was "glad to be locating in this high technology area." He thanked the prior speakers and the crowd, then gave a brief description of Hydro Services. "We have been in Durham for fourteen years concentrating on the service of ultrapure water. We have expanded our programs to include reverse osmosis, ultrafiltration and ultraviolet radiation. We have served the Johns Hopkins Medical Laboratory, Harvard, Yale, Duke, UNC laboratories and NIEHS at Research Triangle Park. This will be our headquarters along with our manufacturing plant for water purification systems for industry and biomedical research. We will also be doing some consulting, but our major product will be a new pipe and valve material used to replace the old valves used in medical laboratories to carry purified water. We are the only company in the world that makes this pipe. We will also be working with interferon, and we are particularly noted for water that helps in the cancer research area." He thanked all for coming and "those who made this possible."

The shovels were first turned by Riley, Rodenhizer and Clement; then by Stewart, Harris and Edwards. Construction on the 12,000 square foot building will begin within a week and should be completed by December.

TEENAGERS
stated their support in lending staff personnel to administer a similar program in Durham, thereby eliminating the $30,000 or more needed to hire a staff.

Carolina Action members raised the question of proper use of CETA funds by Durham. They said Durham received $200,000 under CETA's Title VII program this year. "But there still are not any jobs for these young people. We're asking the business community for its commitment to a summer youth jobs program," said Ms. Harris.

Carolina Action organizer Jevne Diaz said in a telephone interview Tuesday that "the Chamber is capable of supporting the creation of a youth employment program. It is a matter of whether or not they are willing."

The following statistics illustrate the summer job problem in Durham:
—This year, the Employment Security Commission has contacted 191 firms and has received only five commitments for summer youth jobs.
—In 1980, over 1,300 teenagers applied to CETA's Summer Youth Employment and Training program. Over 400 of the applicants were screened by the ESC. Only 139 were placed in CETA jobs.

—Last year, of the 479 teenagers who applied to Job Service for a summer job, 34 were placed in regular jobs, 23 in tobacco work, and 21 obtained employment on their own.
