St. Paul's Gets VEPCO Grant

LAWRENCEVILLE, VA. — Saint Paul's College has been awarded grants by the Virginia Foundation For The Humanities and Public Policy and by the Virginia Electric and Power Company, President S. Dallas Simmons announced last week.

Dr. Simmons said St. Paul's College was one of nineteen organizations and educational institutions to share in an appropriation of $110,040. The funds will be used to support public humanities projects throughout the Commonwealth of Virginia.

At St. Paul's College humanities scholars and interested citizens will consider the influence of technical change on traditional forms of religion and on personal behavior, according to Dr. Simmons. The forums are scheduled to begin at St. Paul's College in October.

The gift from VEPCO is the initial payment on a pledge made this year during the school's ongoing capital projects program for new construction.

Dr. Simmons said, "I understand that VEPCO has been a good friend of the College over the years."

Downtown Temperature Hits 100°

Hello To The 100° Again

By Elson Armstrong, Jr. Just when you thought it was safe to go outside again, that awful heat and humidity returned to Durham and much of North Carolina with a vengeance this week.

On July 27, a roasting 107° high was recorded in downtown Durham and that "out of it" look returned to Bull City residents.

Construction workers took well-deserved liquid breaks as the hot sun bore down from a virtually cloud-free sky.

It was so hot that even children who normally love to play outside all summer found that it was more comfortable to stay inside.

The Bermuda high, now centered in the Gulf of Mexico, has strengthened again and for Tar Heels that means only one thing, the dog days of summer have returned.

A recent brief spell of "cool air" with temperatures in the low 90's has been pushed back north paving the way for the frying pan conditions.

The hot nights are also back. The low on the morning of the 27th was 75°.

Durham was accompanied by other area cities which sweltered under 100° heat. It was 100° in downtown Raleigh at 3 p.m., and likewise for Rocky Mount. Fayetteville, often the hottest city in the state, was smoldering at 95° at noon!

Weather spokesmen again warn residents to take necessary precautions during the heat wave. The heat is most dangerous for the very young and the very old. Very light clothing should be worn and strenuous work or exercise should be curtailed until the cooler hours of the day. Drink plenty of cool liquids and NEVER leave small children or animals in cars with the windows up.

The heat looks like it will be with us for the rest of this week. A cool front to the north may trigger afternoon thunderstorms, but the relief will be short-lived and localized.

As the heat waves danced off Durham pavement, Durham residents grudgingly remembered that the hottest weather of 1980 began exactly one year ago this week.
