BLACK GIANTS

OLIVER CROMWELL

Cromwell was born in Columbus, N.J., around 1752, but his parentage is obscure. He is said to have been raised by Thomas Hutchins, his maternal uncle, and made his living as a farmer.

Cromwell returned to Columbus after the war, married and fathered 14 children, eight of whom he outlived. Known as an honorable man, he is said never to have "chewed tobacco nor drank a glass of ardent spirits."

In his later years, Cromwell, who drew a government pension of 596 a year, lived on East Union Street in Burlington, N.J.

He died on Jan. 24, 1853, in the town of his birth after passing his 100th birthday. Cromwell was buried in the churchyard of the Broad Street Methodist Church in Columbus.

One of those who stood fast in the crisis was a free black soldier by the name of Oliver Cromwell. Cromwell had enlisted at the outset of the Revolution in a company commanded by a Capt. Lowery, attached to the 2nd New Jersey Regiment. He would see the war to its end. And he would share in a great dramatic moment: Washington's crossing of the Delaware.
