

1981 N. C. Fellowship Awards Winners Announced

Gov. James B. Hunt Jr. and Sara W. Hodgkins announced August 18 the 1981 North Carolina fellowship awards for choreographers, musical composers and creative writers.

Receiving N. C. Arts Council Fellowships are Marcia Plevin, a choreographer from Winston-Salem; Peter Klausmeyer, a composer from Carrboro; Angela Davis-Gardner, a fiction writer from Raleigh; and Paul Jones, a poet from Carrboro.

Each fellowship artist is awarded $5,000 to continue with the development of his or her work.

"We think it most important to recognize the central contribution that individual artists make to the creative environment of our state," Secretary Hodgkins said in announcing the fellowships.

The fellowships are intended to provide direct support to artists who, over a period of years, have made substantial contributions through the practice of their art. The awards allow artists to set aside time to work, to purchase supplies and materials, and to achieve specific career goals.

"The fellowship program resulted from a series of public meetings held by the N. C. Arts Council in 1978 at which artists from across the state advocated for direct support and recognition," Secretary Hodgkins said. "This program represents an extension of the Council's programs for individual artists. The Council continues to support artists in residency programs in schools and communities."

During even-numbered years, beginning in 1980, fellowships are available for visual artists. Poets, fiction writers, playwrights, composers and choreographers are eligible during odd-numbered years.

The primary considerations for awards are artistic excellence, the importance of the fellowship to the artist's career at the time of application and past contributions to the art form.

Out-of-state panels in each art form recommended the winners. Serving on the dance panel were David White, executive director of Dance Theatre Workshop in New York City; David Vaughn, a dance critic; and Stuart Hodes, chairman of the Dance Department of New York University.

The musical composition panel's members were Donald Erb, professor of music at Cleveland Institute of Music; Hale Smith, professor of music, Manhattan University of Connecticut; and Miriam Gideon, professor of music, Manhattan School of Music.

The literary panel's members were Patricia Griffith, a Washington, DC based novelist and fiction editor for the Washington Review of the Arts; Richard Taylor, a poet and professor of English at Kentucky State University; and Paul Zimmer, a poet and director of the University of Georgia Press.

They chose the four N. C. Arts Council fellowships from 10 applications in choreography, 19 in musical composition and 63 in creative writing.
