

September Song

By Laura Parks
Tall, courteous, kindly, elegant and incredibly shrewd United Nations Secretary General Kurt Waldheim was forced to interrupt his vacation in his native Austria. He went home, perhaps for the last time, before his expected re-election to a well-deserved second term as U.N. Secretary General. The immediate cause for his return to New York was due to yet another South African invasion of Angola.

On the eve of his expected second term, Kurt Waldheim of Austria and the United Nations, fears that the world is heading for a prolonged period of crisis without precedent in the 20th century. At stake is the very survival of the human race. At the center of the world crisis is the rapidly deteriorating relationship between the industrialized West and the developing world. Waldheim fears that if this aspect of the world crisis is not resolved to the satisfaction of the developing world then disaster is sure to follow. The developing world wants to develop. It wants and needs money, technology, friendly and honest advice. It wants to feel free from superpower power plays. This is the hope.

The reality is far different. With conservative governments in power in Britain and the United States neo-colonialism is enjoying a revival. Britain in the midst of a deep economic crisis is re-arming and is taking an uncompromising attitude toward the situation in Northern Ireland. Now the United States is preparing to re-arm and with British support plans to keep the developing world in line and destroy the forces opposing neo-colonialism and its deeply entrenched powers.

Bankrupt Britain and increasingly ailing United States need the developing world, but the conservatives see this need in terms of a Master and Servant relationship. The Europeans and the Japanese, while enjoying all the fruits of neo-colonialism, are fearful that Britain and her faithful ally the United States intend to treat them, slowly and steadily, as rivals to be pushed down at every major opportunity. With Britain and the U.S. re-arming, this possibility becomes frightfully real.

The European response to the British-American challenge is slowly developing. European industrial leaders know that as much as sixty per cent of their exports go to the developing world. They now fear that an armed America may force them to yield on the economic front.

The Europeans fear, and this must be emphasized, that the United States intends to dominate the economic and military destiny of Europe and through Europe that of the developing world as well. The Europeans, to counter the American challenge, are increasingly committed to finding ways and means of developing an equitable relationship with the developing world. They feel that only through such a relationship can the world economic order hope to achieve stability and this also includes the United States and Britain, if only they could be made to listen to reason.

If reason does not prevail, then a bellicose United States will be perceived as the bully-boy of the world driving Europe and Japan into the arms of its enemies or becoming engaged in an international economic war that will certainly doom the contenders.

Secretary Kurt Waldheim sides with reason. He believes that reason will prevail once the conservative heart and mind perceive the abyss before them. But this will require superhuman effort. It

Anderson Named Administrative Director

Durham banker W. Holt Anderson has been named director of administrative services and secretary-treasurer for the nonprofit, university-related Microelectronics Center of North Carolina (MCNC). A $24.4 million appropriation for MCNC was approved in July by the state's

General Assembly. Anderson has been an officer of the Wachovia Bank for ten years and is currently a Durham vice president of the bank. He is the first full time executive of MCNC, which has been staffed on a part time basis by faculty members from N.C. State University, Duke University and the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill.

Anderson's new appointment, effective October 1, was announced by MCNC chairman George R. Herbert, who is president of the Research Triangle Institute. The Triangle universities, N.C. A&T State University in Greensboro, UNC-Charlotte and RTI are all participating institutions in the microelectronics center.

MCNC was created in mid-1980 to operate a central facility which will be shared and used by all the institutions in their microelectronics activities. In addition, the center is intended to stimulate a rapid expansion of education and research in the fields related to integrated circuit technology through support and coordination of new programs, provision of equipment, and graduate research fellowships.

Center temporary offices are RTI, and an interim laboratory facility will be established in Raleigh at North Carolina State University. The General Assembly's appropriation included funds for a permanent MCNC building in the Research Triangle Park, and Herbert said planning for the structure should begin early next year.

A Duke University graduate, Anderson is vice president of the Duke-Durham Alumni Association and of the Blue Devil Club. He is a Chamber of Commerce task force chairman, and has served five years with the Durham United Way, is the local district secretary of Rotary International, and is a member of the Sales and Marketing Executives of Durham.

Subscribe To The Carolina Times
Call 682-2913 Today

LOS ANGELES—Los Angeles Mayor Tom Bradley cuts the 300-lb. birthday cake during a Los Angeles bicentennial celebration on the City Hall steps. The city is celebrating its 200th anniversary with celebrations throughout the city. UPI Photo

Five NCCU Graduate Students Get Awards

Five graduate students at North Carolina Central University have been awarded National Science Foundation Minority Institutions Graduate Traineeships for the 1981-82 academic year. Two are sociology majors and three are biology majors.

The awards were announced by Dr. Mary M. Townes, dean of the Graduate School of Arts and Sciences at North Carolina Central. The traineeships provide annual stipends of $4,500 in addition to tuition and fees.

Award recipients in biology are Ms. Linda Kaye Bass of Mount Olive, Ms. Tamara Germaine Phillips of Baton Rouge, La., and Melvin M. Trotter of Ocean Springs, Ms. Sociology award recipients are Daniel Mallison of Washington, N.C., and Ms. Bridgette Hopkins of Williamsburg, Va.

Ms. Bass is a May graduate of NCCU, where she received the bachelor of science degree cum laude in biology. She is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Benjamin Bass of 417 E. Franklin St., Mt. Olive, and a graduate of Southern Wayne High School, Dudley. Miss Bass was a student librarian's assistant at NCCU and has worked as a research assistant at the Environmental Protection Agency. She is a member of Beta Kappa Chi Honor Society.

Ms. Phillips was a University Scholar at Dillard University, where she received her bachelor of science degree in chemistry (pre-medicine) in May. She is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Jesse Theodor

Phillips of 1691 North 40th Street, Baton Rouge, and attended Capitol High School in Baton Rouge.

Trotter is an August graduate of Tougaloo College, where received the bachelor of science degree in biology. He is the son of the Rev. Jesse L. Trotter, 1702 Weed Street, Ocean Springs, Ms. He received Tougaloo's Cogit Phi Cogit Academic Award. He has been a project assistant at Brookhaven National Laboratory. He has also worked at Ingalls Shipbuilding in Pascagoula, Mississippi.

Ms. Hopkins graduated cum laude from Virginia State University in May, receiving the bachelor of arts degree in sociology. She is the daughter of Mrs. Anna G. Hopkins of 303 Peachontas St., Williamsburg, and graduated from Williamsburg's Lafayette High School. She has worked at the Colonial Williamsburg Foundation.

Ms. Hopkins is a member of Alpha Kappa Delta National Honor Society.

Mallison received his bachelor of arts degree in sociology at NCCU in May. He is the son of Daniel and Mrs. Rosa Mallison of 131-49 225th St., Laurelton, N.Y., and lists his hometown address as 607 N. Market St., Washington, N.C. He is a graduate of Andrew Jackson High School in Cambria Heights, N.Y. He has been employed as a counselor in a mental hygienic camp and as a gameroom attendant at NCCU, and is a member of the National Sociology Honor Society.

It's new. It's beige.
More Lights 100s

