UNC Loses Bryant For Rest Of Season By Elson Armstrong, Jr. on the Astro-Turf field

North Carolina won it's football game against Georgia Tech (28-7) last Saturday in Atlanta, but to most fans the game has become secondary to the news that star tailback Kelvin Bryant who sustained an injury early in the first quarter will probably not return to the Carolina fold for the rest of this season.

UNC team physician Timothy Taft said on Tuesday afternoon that "Kelvin tore the cartilage in his knee. He also tore ligaments which will slow any recovery. As of now I'll say that he will probably be out for six to eight weeks," which of course, covers the rest of the UNC regular season.

Carolina Coach Dick Crum blamed the injury

The University of at Tech. "If you see the films, you'll see that it wasn't a dirty hit that sidelined Kelvin, but on that turf his legs couldn't give — therefore the in-jury." Crum also added that Georgia Tech also suffered because of the artificial surface. "In the same game one of their kids has been lost for the season", he said.

Crum readily admits that he is no fan of artificial playing surfaces. "We have an artificial practice field here at UNC, but unless we're having a cyclone or a tornado, we never practice on it" With Bryant out, who . Garner
