Apples Are Food For Myth, Legend

By CHRIS TIEDEMANN
N. C. State University

Apples are not only food for Americans, they are food for myth and legend as well.

According to Dr. Nadine Tope, extension food conservation and preparation specialist at North Carolina State University, many of those myths are romantic ones.

"A spiral of apple peeling, thrown over the shoulder of an unmarried peeler, supposedly will form the initial of her future husband," Dr. Tope says.

Or try cutting an apple in two. If it has an equal number seeds in each half, a marriage will soon follow. If one of the seeds is cut in two, the course of love will not be smooth.

In Persia, apples were considered the "fruit of immortality," Dr. Tope says. And, of course, Isaac Newton is supposed to have discovered gravity while seated under an apple tree observing falling apples.

YOUTH AND ALCOHOL

Alcohol abuse is still a big problem for today's young people, says Dr. Leo Hawkins, extension human development specialist at North Carolina State University.

"A recent study at the Research Triangle Institute shows that more than 50 percent of 10th and 12th-graders are users of alcohol. 30 percent are misusers and 17 to 18 percent are abstainers. A misuser was classified as someone who became drunk at least six times in the past year or suffered negative consequences after drinking at least twice in the past year.
