Blacks and T.V.

sheepishly said, "I don't know of the future episodes of 'Dallas.' Thirty-six million in this country and untold millions abroad (including viewers in Zimbabwe) tune in to this program which leaves the impression weekly that there are no blacks in a city that is on the verge of electing a black congressman.

Indeed, if one sets aside the so-called "black" shows on evening TV, one might think that the U.S. was a country as white as Iceland. But daytime TV is a little better. Last year the Concerned Black Artists for Action estimated that a meager four per cent of daytime drama's 350 continuing roles were black ones. Add to that the fact that shows like "Ryan's Hope," "The Young and the Restless," "Texas," "Search for Tomorrow," "The Guiding Light" and "Days of Our Lives," have been notorious for featuring no regular black characters and the dismal picture of the status of blacks on soap operas, becomes all too clear. Those few blacks who have found employment in the "soaps" are not happy with the roles they have been playing. Ellen Holly played "Carla Scott" on "One Life to Live" for a staggering twelve consecutive years but finally left with disgust: "I wish I could feel I've pioneered something, but instead I felt a tremendous sense of frustration."

Herb Davis, remembered as "Carla's" former boyfriend and most recently as Lt. Luke Chandler on "The Edge of Night," could have been describing Bryan Phillips ("General Hospital") or Sadie Gray ("One Life to Live") or Calvin Stone ("Edge of Night"), when he said of his current role, "after all, my function on 'Edge of Night' has been to validate white people's decisions. ... I am a sort of neuter good guy."

In other words, soap operas which have portrayed eagerly venereal disease, abortion, "surrogate mothering," nuns falling in love, child abuse, etc., have been extraordinarily hesitant about tackling the number one "social problem" in this country — racism. The visitor to this country who watches daytime TV would not know this problem existed and would know even less about the fight-back against it.

Social science researchers have paid more and more attention to the issue of television apartheid. According to Prof. Bradley Greensberg of Michigan State University, "The typical fictional character is a white male in his late 30's or 40's in the midst of very pretty, soft women." Blacks, says the professor, make up a small percentage of the TV "population" with half employed on all-black shows. These TV blacks are younger, funnier, flashier and less likely to be employed than whites shown on the screen. The 'comic buffoon' is the typical black image.

So much for blacks and the fictional TV programs, but those who think blacks have fared better in the news division should think again. The three major commercial networks employ a total of nineteen black reporters but only one (Carole Simpson, NBC, Capitol Hill) has a major beat. None of the networks has a single executive producer or vice president of news.

Max Robinson, black co-anchor of ABC's national news show, caused a furor when he was alleged to have charged that his network had discriminated against him and other black journalists by excluding them from coverage of the Presidential inauguration and the return of the hostages from Iran.

With fury and scorn, Robinson was quoted as saying that the news media are "a crooked mirror" through which "white America views itself" and that "only by talking about racism, by taking a personal risk, will I take myself out of the mean, racist trap all black Americans find themselves in."

Unseemly pressure from top-level corporate quarters forced Robinson to retreat a bit but his words ring no less true. But just as corporate big-wigs pressured Robinson, blacks must pressure these same fat cats if change is to come. And it should not be forgotten that these characters are not omnipotent and, in fact, quite vulnerable.

TV is a commercial medium. It exists not to entertain or inform but to make profits, mostly through the ubiquitous commercials that pockmark the landscape. In 1979, a total of 574 sponsors spent $4.7 billion on network television. Procter and Gamble again led the list, followed closely by General Foods, American Home Products (manufacturer of a number of home remedies), General Motors, Bristol Myers, Ford, Philip Morris, General Mills, Johnson and Johnson, and Pepsico. Like Coca-Cola, recently forced by Jesse Jackson to make concessions to blacks, all of these corporate giants have an Achilles heel exposed to the black community that is aching to be lanced. These sponsors should be told in writing about the damage their shows are doing to blacks and the putrid hiring records of these programs when it comes to hiring. Ultimately, the weapon of organized boycott should be wielded. In any event, until hardball is played with the TV moguls, more of the same insult should be expected.

PITTSBURGH, PA—Convicted killer Sidney Brinkley smiles after he was convicted and sentenced to life in prison a fourth time for the slaying of a Pittscoed. The foreman of a six-man, six woman jury told judge Ralph J. Cappy the panel was "hopelessly deadlocked" on whether to sentence Brinkley to life in prison or death in the electric chair for the slaying of Monica Jones, 18, of north Philadelphia. UPI Photo

Letter to the Editor: The Great Humanitarian Washington Duke

The pro and con discussion involving the Nixon Library at Duke University, brings to mind the university founder, Washington Duke; Terry Sanford, president of Duke University; Lawyer Richard Nixon, our 37th President; and the Biblical Stone Throwers. Washington Duke and his two industrious sons, James B. and B.N. Duke, were great humanitarians, with ability, foresight and wisdom. With them, God, human beings and the city and county of Durham came first. Oppositions or challenges to progressive ideas for Durham, were considered to be personal affronts.

Long years ago, Durham authorities planned to build a number of new school houses for all children, except for those who happened to be born black. Washington Duke, a devout Methodist, believed in justice for all. He informed the authorities, that before he'd continue to pay high taxes, and donate large sums of money for white children, and do nothing for poor black children, he would move his factories to England.

Now, just suppose the authorities had not been reasonable men, and failed to listen to Washington Duke? For blacks, today - there would be no such commendable school structures as Hillside, W.G. Pearson, C.C. Spaulding, and others; no Lincoln Hospital, no historical St. Joseph's A.M.E. Church; no Duke Auditorium at N.C.C. University; no multi-million dollar Mechanics and Farmers Bank; no billion-dollar North Carolina Mutual Life Insurance Co.; and no "Duke University Renown, The World Around."

The chief administrator, Pres. Sanford, Duke trustees and others, are in favor of the Nixon Library. There are others, some of whom, owe their jobs to these administrators, not only oppose the Nixon Library, but the continuation of Pres. Terry Sanford in office.

Richard Milhous Nixon was educated at Whittier (Calif.) College (B.A., 1934) and Duke University Law School (LL.B., 1937). He practiced law in Whittier; served as government attorney, Washington, D.C., and as Pres. Eisenhower's Vice President from 1953 to 1961. It was during this time — 1954, that the Duke faculty voted to deny Vice Pres. Nixon an honorary degree.

On Jan. 20, 1969, he became President. Six months later he became the first President, and the only leader of any nation in the world, to speak to the first man on the moon, Neil Armstrong, a great American. He brought an end to U.S. engagement in the Vietnam War — longest and costliest war in U.S. history. He moved to end the Cold War with China and the Soviet Union. His administrative achievements are too numerous to mention.

We cannot continue building up Duke University, the City of Durham, nor our great country, by throwing stones at our leaders. St. John 8, Master this woman was taken in adultery. Moses commanded that such should be stoned; but what sayest thou? He said unto them, he that is without sin among you, let him first cast a stone at her. No stones were cast. All stone throwers departed.
