There Will Be A World Series

By Larry Barber
Yes, there is a 1981 World Series, and it got underway Tuesday night in New York City where the Yankees downed the Los Angeles Dodgers 5-3.
It was doubtful that there would be a "Fall Classic" when the Major League's players went on a 52-day strike in a bitter dispute with team owners and baseball administration.
Well, after the strike was settled and play resumed, a split season format was formulated to determine division and league winners. Divisional leaders before the strike played the team that won the same division in the second season in the best of five series.
In the American League, Oakland beat Kansas City in the west and the Yankees disposed of Milwaukee in the east. The National League saw Los Angeles prevail over Houston in the west, and Montreal over defending champion Philadelphia in the east.
For the pennants, New York quickly took care of Oakland three games to none, and the Dodgers got by Montreal three games to two.
So after the dust cleared and the artificial grass was cleaned, there were two old rivals in the 1981 World Series, Los Angeles against the pinstriped N.Y. Yankees.
