

Sammy Davis Awarded Doctor Of Literature

By Trelle L. Jeffers

ATLANTA — Noted entertainer Sammy Davis, Jr., was awarded an honorary Doctor of Literature degree during the 116th year celebration of Atlanta University, at a university system-wide convocation exercise in Sisters Chapel on the campus of Spelman College, Friday, October 16.

Members on the honorary degree selection committee said that Davis was chosen because of his unyielding support to black colleges and universities.

Davis, who is acclaimed as one of the greatest entertainers and who is the only black to own a share in financially profitable night clubs in Las Vegas, Nevada, is reputed to be one of the wealthiest blacks in the country and is said to contribute enormous sums of money to predominantly black institutions of higher education.

In his teary acceptance of the honorary degree, Davis told the packed chapel audience that he "had never finished grammar school," but that he is committed to helping other blacks get an education.

In his autobiography, Yes, I Can, Davis stated that he began attending at the age of four with his father and uncle, and he has continued to entertain for more than fifty years.

Dr. John Hope Franklin, distinguished historian and author of fifteen books and hundreds of articles, and Dr. John Spencer, a scholar of African Affairs, also received honorary degrees of the Doctor of Literature.

Dr. Franklin, who is perhaps best known for From Slavery To Freedom, an historical account of blacks in America, was the chief speaker on the program. He told the audience that in order for a university to maintain its independence, it is necessary for those who believe in it to continue to express this belief through their support.

Dr. Franklin also said that there are signs that the support for predominantly black institutions is beginning to falter.

Atlanta University is one of the oldest universities in the country. Distinguished scholars such as W.E.B. DuBois, E. Franklin Frazier, and James Weldon Johnson are listed among some of the university's former professors.

Family Strength Helps During Crisis

By CHRIS TIEDEMANN
N. C. State University

War, unemployment, sickness, infidelity — all these are crises any family might face. Why, then, do some families wilt under the stress while others thrive?

According to Dr. Leo Hawkins, extension human development specialist at North Carolina State University, families that have worked hard to develop certain strengths tend to weather stress best.

"The habits that they have developed help them to perform well under stress and bring the family through a crisis to a higher level of living," Dr. Hawkins says.

Eight factors influence performance under family stress. They include adaptability and adjustment of roles to do what is necessary. Family integration and organization are also important.

Also helpful are the affections held for one another; good marital adjustment; friendly parent-child relations; family council decision-making; social participation of the wife and previous experience with crisis.
