

...and a Wonderful Thing to Save

Hugh Cullman agrees with the poignant United Negro College Fund (UNCF) motto, "A mind is a terrible thing to waste."

But he has been known, invariably, to add, "and a wonderful thing to save."

Mr. Cullman is in the business of saving minds. As General Chairman of the Greater New York Campaign of the UNCF, Mr. Cullman has gingerly accepted the challenge of heading an effort pledged to raise about $4 million in 1981 in the New York metropolitan area. The UNCF's national goal is $21 million.

"The needs are pressing for the 41 colleges and universities in the UNCF family," Mr. Cullman said recently, "and our first priority will be to raise the level of individual giving—to make the success of the UNCF drive everyone's responsibility."

The Chairman and Chief Executive Officer of Philip Morris U.S.A., Mr. Cullman has started this year's effort close to home. "As generous as this nation's major corporations and foundations have been in the past," he said, "we are asking them all to increase their contributions."

Other aspects of the heightened New York area campaign have been to seek increases from smaller businesses and individuals as well as to produce a variety of promotional events ranging from tennis matches to person-to-person solicitations to widened direct-mail campaigns.

"The demands are enormous at the UNCF schools and they are simply not able to raise funds through traditional methods," Mr. Cullman said.

He said that UNCF schools receive 80 percent of their contributions from corporations and foundations and 20 percent from individuals, while the ratio for other small, private colleges and universities is the exact reverse.

Founded 37 years ago to assist these poor and predominantly black institutions of higher learning, the UNCF has won the respect and the cooperation of the nation's largest corporations and its most prestigious foundations.

Taking note of this phenomenon, tennis champion Arthur Ashe has observed "America's most enlightened corporations have made it a practice to contribute to worthy causes like the UNCF. As they work together, private industry and private, non-profit organizations are doing a great deal toward building a stronger America."

Mr. Cullman, the Chairman of the Seventh Annual UNCF/Arthur Ashe Tennis Benefit, worked closely with Mr. Ashe in promoting the event, held in November at Madison Square Garden.

"Business corporations and foundations should certainly play major roles in assisting the UNCF schools," Mr. Cullman said, "for these institutions provide quality education for young people who would, otherwise, not get an education; and, to a great extent, they help to save the young minds we will need if we're to survive as a community and a nation."

Mr. Cullman dismisses the now and then allegation that the UNCF schools, all but one of which is in the South and several of which date back to the 1800's, have outlived their usefulness in a nation of more than 3,000 far-better-funded institutions.

As UNCF Director Christopher Edley points out, "UNCF schools place a major emphasis on compensatory education. By training and tradition, and within the framework of specially designed curricula, faculty are equipped to counter the effects of inferior secondary education. By graduation time, a student at a UNCF school has earned a first-class education."

"Our UNCF schools are something special," Mr. Cullman has said, "something very special."

He made additional points that:

• UNCF institutions educate students who normally could not afford to attend college; UNCF tuitions are 33 percent lower than those at other private schools.

• Three out of every four UNCF students come from families with annual incomes of under $10,000, compared to 15 percent of the students at other colleges who came from families with similar incomes.

• The UNCF colleges function as cultural "filling stations" as they give full play to the black experience and culture, something the most well-intentioned predominantly white institutions cannot do. Academic programs needed to prepare students for the world of work are not sacrificed, however.

• Because of the strong emphasis on educational excellence, athletic scholarships are virtually unknown at UNCF schools. Once known, primarily, for producing clergymen and educators, the UNCF schools have, within the past two decades, broadened into fields of business, engineering, government and health professions.

Prior to being named to head the New York area drive this year, Mr. Cullman served two consecutive terms as National Vice Chairman for Industries in the UNCF Corporate Campaign.

He has brought from the corporate world a penchant for energy, clarity and directness in his pursuit of money for the UNCF schools.

"These bright, deserving young people would not have the opportunity to complete their education without the funds provided by the UNCF," Mr. Cullman adds, "A mind is indeed a terrible thing to waste, and a wonderful thing to save."

Spectacles: A Closer Look Course Electives With Meaning

By Ada M. Fisher

No matter what one's preparation for his/her job, there are times when we can look back and say, "I wish I had taken ..... while in high school." For those who haven't finished high school, it's not too late. A high school diploma can do much to increase job opportunities and options. Graduate Equivalency Diplomas (GED's) are offered to those who can pass the examination based upon life experience or for many who take refresher courses. These can be arranged through local boards of education, high schools, or technical schools.

Any student in high school, or headed for same, would do well to take electives which expand his/her skills beyond a core of English, mathematics and science. One of the most useful skills offered is typing. Typing and a handle on the alphabet not only can provide clerical opportunities but an entree to the world of computers and computer science. Too few people realize that word processors and other computers use the standard typewriter keyboard as their communications base. Knowing how to type opens so many doors. It should be a number one priority for those who want to be better understood, more professionally viewed, and have options beyond the norm.

Though many dream of the life of luxury, few will be able to afford it. Our children must be able to take care of themselves. A course dealing with Activities of Daily Living (ADL) should be required of all students in junior high and high school. For the young man who can't iron or replace a button; for the woman who doesn't know how to paint or replace a plug, why not a course which gives them some housekeeping survival skills? Students and other citizens would be well served by a course in basic car repair. As many move to the suburbs or take commuting jobs, cars and other modes of transportation are essential. Learning to change your own tires, filters, oil, wipers, and window wash solvent are some simple things that can save you money.

Budgeting and setting up housekeeping are tasks children are taking for granted. They need to learn early how expensive it is to manage a household. Where possible, they should be encouraged to participate in the management of their own household so that they may truly appreciate what it cost to feed and clothe them. Simple bookkeeping skills and learning to manage a bank account are steps toward this end. A project that black banks and financial institutions might help us with is a symposium offered biannually directed at children and their parents on what it costs to live. The number of people who need help in understanding checking accounts, investments, insurance and taxes is unbelievable. Each of these would be a good mini-course offered by the private sector to the public sector through schools.

Health education is another subject which should be a part of the curriculum. Since the black population in general is more likely to be hit harder by many diseases for socio-economic reasons, we as a group need to realize how important it is for us to protect our health. Physical education is already required by many institutions. Band and chorus should teach us more than how to put on a show. We should learn to appreciate the rhythms and work which go into each composition. Lastly there is sports. Not all of our children can be an O.J. Simpson or a Kareem Abdul Jabbar. To let students focus their lives on athletics to the exclusion of other subjects speaks poorly of our guidance and future vision. Academic preparation is what we should send our students to school for. High schools and parents should require a minimum of a C average before a child is allowed to participate in extracurricular or competitive sports activities. Too many of our athletes are getting into college only to not graduate for lack of academic preparation and understanding.

Black People, Wake Up. The future is now. If we don't prepare ourselves and our children as broadly as possible to cope with this ever changing world, we will find ourselves left at the starting gate.

NYC Police Commissioner, AP Face Suit

NEW YORK — The Socialist Workers Party last week filed a $100 million lawsuit against the Associated Press and New York City Police Commissioner Robert McGuire. The suit charges that the socialists were libeled by a false AP story linking the SWP with the hold-up of a Brinks armored car in New York last month.

The complaint, filed in New York State Supreme Court, charges that the

New York Police aimed to "disrupt the lawful political activities of the SWP and its members for the purpose . . . of interfering with plaintiffs' ability to fully participate in the electoral process, attract members and supporters and freely exercise their rights of freedom of speech and association without fear of reprisals."

The AP story claimed that "FBI spokesman

Joe Valiquette . . . said the bureau had determined" that Judith Clark, one of those arrested in the Brinks hold-up, "is now a figure in the Socialist Workers Party." A "corrective," issued by AP the next day, attributed the information to Police Commissioner McGuire.

Jack Barnes, SWP National Secretary and a plaintiff in the libel suit, said that "this malicious slander has all the earmarks of an FBI

'COINTELPRO' disruption operation. Planting false stories in the media is standard operating procedure for the political police.

"This is a conscious attempt to smear the SWP. It aims to misrepresent our political views. And its goal is to justify further disruption operations against our party."

"The SWP," said Barnes, "is not the only target of this disruption plot. Activists in the black movement have been singled out in a wave of police round-ups. The government aims to cook up a gigantic 'conspiracy' around the Brinks hold-up."

"Our suit against the New York cops and Associated Press is an important response to this government attack on democratic rights."

The libel suit is closely tied to the SWP's and Young Socialist Alliance's lawsuit against government spying, harassment and disruption. That case is now awaiting a decision in Federal District Court in New York.

On the lawsuit, the FBI, CIA and other government spy agencies have waged a forty-year-long campaign to disrupt the two organizations.

The government was forced to disclose over 200,000 pages of previously secret files, documenting their anti-democratic campaign against the SWP and YSA. The files show that planting false stories in the news media is a favorite FBI tactic.

"The slander attack on the SWP aims to affect the outcome of this lawsuit," said John Studer, executive director of the Political Rights Defense Fund. "It is exactly the kind of crime against democratic rights that this lawsuit is challenging."

Roy Wilkins Scholarship Fund Set Up

CHAPEL HILL — The Roy Wilkins Memorial Fund to provide scholarships for minority students has been established in the School of Journalism of the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill.

The original donor to the fund wishes to remain anonymous, Dean Richard R. Cole of the School of Journalism said.

"The fund is modest now, but we hope it will grow," Cole said. "The school has been earmarking some money specifically for minority scholarships, but there's not nearly enough."

Wilkins, who was one of the most noted civil rights advocates in the United States, died on September 8. He was also a journalist, but he was best known as executive secretary of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People. Among his many honors was the 1969 Presidential Medal of Freedom.

Anyone may send a contribution for the fund to the School of Journalism, Howell Hall 021A, UNC-CH, Chapel

Hot Turkey Stuffed Tomatoes is a new and delicious way with holiday leftovers. Large tomatoes are hollowed out, then filled with a tasty combination of turkey, cashews, celery, and onion. Evaporated milk provides the robust base for the sauce that binds these ingredients together. Enjoy!

HOT TURKEY STUFFED TOMATOES (Makes 6 to 8 servings)

6 to 8 large (2 1/2 to 3 1/2-inch) tomatoes
2 tablespoons flour
1/2 teaspoon pepper
1/2 cup undiluted CARNATION Evaporated Milk
1/4 cup water
3 cups cooked diced turkey
1/2 cup coarsely chopped salted cashews
1/2 cup chopped celery
1/4 cup chopped green onion
1/4 teaspoon marjoram leaves
1/4 teaspoon basil leaves

Cut tops off tomatoes. Scoop out pulp and seeds; save for future use. Turn tomatoes upside down to drain. Combine flour and pepper in medium saucepan. Gradually stir in evaporated milk and water. Cook over medium heat, stirring constantly, until mixture just comes to a boil and thickens. Add turkey, cashews, celery, onion, marjoram, and basil. Heat, stirring constantly, until mixture is heated through. Spoon into tomato shells. Place in 12 x 7 1/2 x 2-inch baking dish. Bake in slow oven (325°F.)
