Most Affordable Housing!

By Lisa Drake
Consumer Affairs Advisor
Manufactured Housing Institute

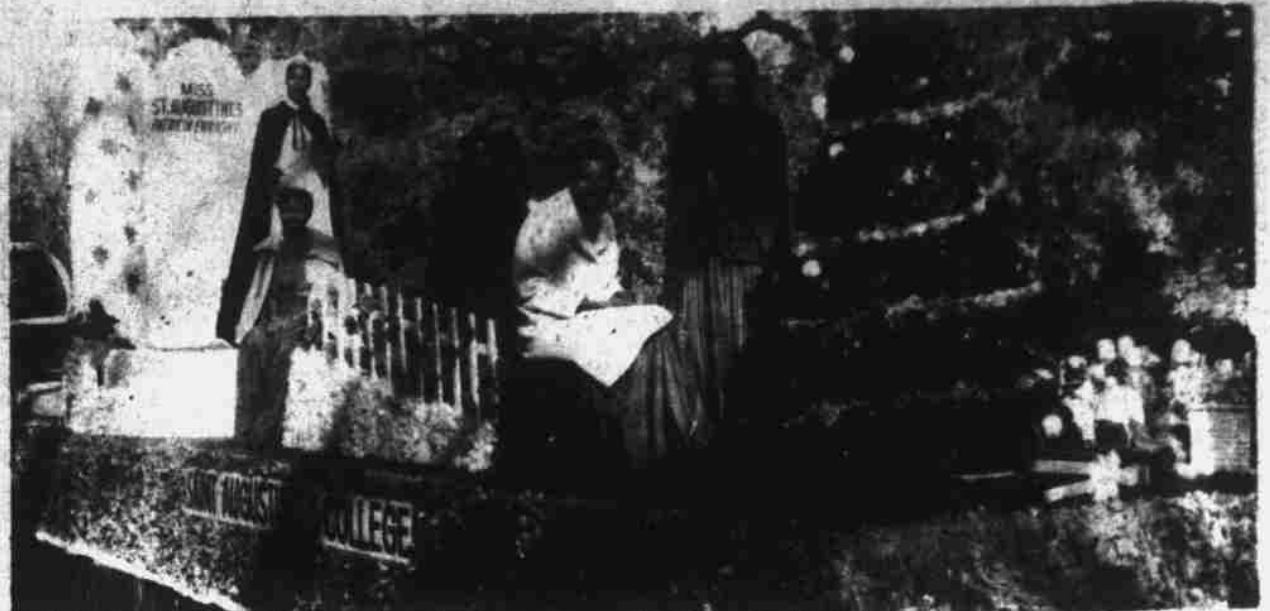

Recently released U.S. Department of Commerce data shows that the average American family cannot afford to buy a new site-built house!

Of the 531,000 site-constructed houses actually sold last year, only 48,000 or 9 per cent were purchased for under $40,000. On the other hand, over 221,000 mobile/manufactured homes were delivered in 1980 with the majority selling for below the $40,000 mark.

According to the Manufactured Housing Institute, the average sales price of a new mobile/manufactured home in 1980 (including all sizes) was $18,500. This compares with the average 1980 price of a site-constructed house of $76,300, as reflected by Commerce Department figures.

It would seem obvious that the mobile/manufactured home is the only affordable housing choice for a growing segment of America's citizens.

Yet, in spite of the fact that virtually 100 percent of all homes selling for less than $30,000 are mobile/manufactured homes, many legislators are still slow in lifting unconstitutional zoning restrictions against such housing, and the financial community is only just beginning to bring its mobile/manufactured home loans up to parity with site-built housing financing.
