Judge Galloway Files For Reelection

By Donald Alderman
Judge Karen B. Galloway filed for reelection Friday afternoon after kicking off the campaign with an early morning breakfast among supporters and well-wishers at the Downtowner Motor Inn. She is a district court judge for the Fourteenth Judicial District.

Saying "there is more to being a judge than sitting on the bench and watching the cases go by," Judge Galloway talked about her involvement in a three-point program aimed at preventing "the same people from coming into court or into jail over and over again."

Called "Probation Challenge for Durham County", the program seeks to provide counseling, education and employment for probationers.

Judge Galloway said 85% of probationers are uneducated and unemployable.

"If we just put them on the street and have them check in once and a while, they're likely to get into trouble again."

"The cost of keeping someone in prison for a year is over $8500. For a lot less than that, we can help people get education, counseling and jobs, so they're not likely to see the inside of a courtroom again," Judge Galloway said.

The program is being coordinated at almost an expense-free cost, Judge Galloway said, thanks to no cost assistance from Durham Technical Institute, North Carolina Central University and the Durham Chamber of Commerce.

DTI provides courses for probationers without high school diplomas and skills training for others. NCCU's Graduate Counseling

Department offers supportive counseling and the Chamber of Commerce's Private Sector Initiative Program aids in finding jobs for rehabilitated offenders.

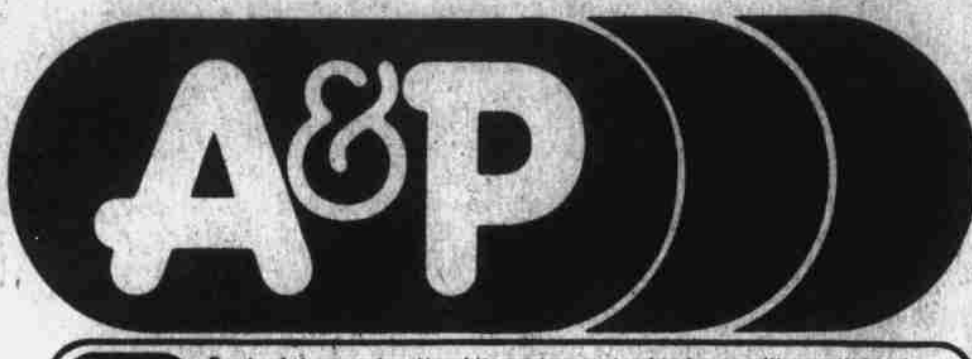

Staff members of the Adult Probation Department are also assisting, she said.

"It may sound tough," Judge Galloway said, "but we are giving these offenders a simple choice: Go to school or go to jail. Of course they prefer school. And, once they get into school, they may find that they like it better than being on the street."

While not proposing that more people be put on probation, Judge Galloway said preventive steps need to be taken to insure that probationers do not become repeat offenders.

Before the judgeship appointment, by Gov. Jim Hunt in 1980, Ms. Galloway was a partner in two area law firms.

She is affiliated with several groups including the National Conference of Black Lawyers, National Association of Black Women Attorneys and North Carolina Association of Black Lawyers.
