

NCCU Exhibit Features Melvin Carver and T. Suomalainen

A new art exhibit opened Sunday at North Carolina Central University's Museum of Art entitled "Melvin Carver, 2-D and T. Suomalainen, 3-D Works". The exhibit is an annual event featuring the work of an art faculty member and that of another artist from off campus who is working in a different medium. Melvin Carver is this year's faculty artist. Tom Suomalainen is the off campus artist.

Carver is director of NCCU's Art Department Visual Communications Program. One of his special interests is the computer. Use of the computer in creating art has taken him to Massachusetts Institute of Technology for a number of summer sessions. There and at other computer centers, he has learned to manipulate the computer in such a way as to design, draw, and paint. He says that the computer provides the artist with infinite possibilities. Carver's colorful works in this show will introduce the visitor to some of the uses of high technology in creating aesthetically pleasing visual art. Carver's works have been exhibited at the Southeastern Center for Contemporary Arts, Winston-Salem; the Horace Williams House, Chapel Hill; and in a number of Durham Art Guild shows. He is a member of the Durham

Arts Council and the Durham Art Guild. Suomalainen is a sculptor from Walnut Cove — a rural artists' community near Winston-Salem. Clay is his primary medium. In recent years, Suomalainen has begun to add objects such as feathers to the base ceramic work. A variety of glazes are used in a painterly manner. The works on display at NCCU are from the collection of Ruth and Ira Julian, a represent over a decade of the artist's work. Suomalainen's work has been exhibited in many nationally known galleries and museums. Among them are the High Museum, Atlanta; the Everson Museum, Syracuse; and SECCA, Winston-Salem for a one-man exhibit in 1981. The exhibition is free to the public.
