

C-R Exhibition Set For NCCU August 1

By Donald Alderman
Throughout the 1950's and '60's, many blacks, unwilling to tolerate more racism, shook the conscience of mainstream America with boycotts of white businesses, marches and demonstrations.

At the onset of this protest movement that began in the South and spread nationwide, whites often responded with economic reprisals, jailings and beatings. Mass media often captured the flavor of the Civil Rights Movement, especially in the larger cities, but media often missed the quiet but intense behind-the-scenes events. In many instances, these events and the people involved captured the essence of the Movement.

Many photographers working for civil rights organizations focused on local events in rural areas. And about 100 such photographs will be featured during an exhibition at North Carolina Central University beginning Sunday, August 1.

Entitled "We'll Never Turn Back", the exhibition series, photographically charts the Civil Rights Movement. It is part of a program of the Washington, D.C.-based Smithsonian Institution, dubbed SITES — Smithsonian Institution Traveling Exhibition Service.

SITES, according to a Smithsonian official, consists of 120 different exhibitions traveling throughout the country and abroad, concentrating in the arts, history and science. "We'll Never Turn Back", the official said, will run until February, 1984. The series will be shown at three North Carolina black colleges this summer.

According to Ronald Smith, an official at N.C. A&T State University who is coordinating the activities for the state, each appearance will last five days.

The other universities where the exhibit will be shown are A&T and Fayetteville State.

All of the exhibitions, according to Smith, will have the same format: opening ceremony with a prominent speaker, two panel discussions and set hours for the public to view the historical photos.

At NCCU, the series will get underway at 3 p.m., Sunday, August 1, with an opening showing of the photographs and a reception to be held in the school's Museum of Art. Then, Julius Chambers, one of the nation's more prominent civil rights lawyers, will speak on "Civil rights legislation and the impact of the movement on the American legal system". The address is slated at 4:30 p.m., in the school's Music Auditorium.

Two panel discussions are slated for Tuesday and Thursday evenings, August 3 and August 5. They, too, will take place in the Music Auditorium.

"The Civil Rights Movement: Impact on the Quality of Life in Durham" will be the subject of the first panel discussion to begin at 7:30 p.m.

Panelists include: Mrs. Vivian A. Edmonds, editor and publisher of The Carolina Times; Dr. Harmon Smith, professor of moral theology at Duke University; and John S. Stewart, former president of Mutual Savings and Loan Association.

"The Future of Civil Rights: Progress or Retreat?" will be the subject of the second panel discussion that will also begin at 7:30 p.m.

Panelists include: Ms. Ann Atwater, Durham Housing Authority member; Dr. Cecil L. Patterson, NCCU's vice chancellor for academic affairs; Ben Ruffin, assistant to Gov. Jim Hunt and Dr. Andrew M. Secrest, director of NCCU's program of media-journalism.

Dr. Percy Murray, chairman of NCCU's history department, will moderate both panel discussions.

The exhibition will be open to the public without admission charge Sunday from 3 p.m. to 4:30 p.m.; Monday through Thursday from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m.

Evening viewing is slated on Tuesday and Thursday from 7 p.m. to 8 p.m. The series will end Thursday evening.

Back" is sponsored by the NCCU Summer School, the N.C. Humanities Committee and SITES.

The exhibition at Fayetteville State will run July 25 through July 29, and the one at A&T State runs August 15 through August 19.

One panel discussion in each location will focus on the impact of the Movement in that city. But the second panel discussion in Fayetteville and Greensboro will focus on the subject, "From Civil Rights to Human Rights". NCCU's looks at the progress or retreat of civil rights.

Minority Students In Dental Research

CHAPEL HILL. — Two North Carolina high school students are spending the summer working as research apprentices at the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill School of Dentistry.

The two are Miss Paula McLean of Rt. 3, Red Springs, a rising senior at the N.C. School of Science and Mathematics, and Harry Monds of 1000 Brandon Road, Durham, a student at Charles E. Jordan Senior High School.

Through the School of Dentistry's minority high school research apprentice program, McLean and Monds are working in laboratories at the UNC-CH Dental Research Center. In addition to hands-on laboratory work with a faculty member, the students are participating in research center seminars within the School of Dentistry.

Miss McLean is working with Dr. James Bawden, Alumni Distinguished professor of pedodontics, on a project dealing with fluorides and mineralization. Monds is working with Dr. Duane Dreyer, associate professor of oral and maxillofacial surgery, on a neurophysiology project concerning nerve transmissions.

Dr. Daniel Shugars, the School of Dentistry's director of student affairs, and Dr. William Grant, an associate professor at N.C. State University who has been an associate of the Dental Research Center for the past two years, are coordinating the program.

The dental school hopes participation in the program will encourage the apprentices to pursue careers in dentistry, Shugars said. The program is a small part of the school's efforts to increase the number of minorities studying at the dental school and practicing dentistry in North Carolina, he said.

Funded by a grant from the division of research resources of the Federal Department of Health and Human Resources, the eight-week program began June 18 and will run through August 14.

Purple Heart Embossed Envelope To Be Issued

WASHINGTON — The first military decoration established in what was to become the United States of America, The Order of the Purple Heart for Military Merit, known as "the Purple Heart", will be featured on an embossed stamped envelope to be issued August 6, in Washington, D.C., the U.S. Postal Service has announced.

The 20-cent envelope will be dedicated at The Pentagon. Postmaster General William F. Bolger and Secretary of Defense Caspar W. Weinberger will participate in the 11 a.m. ceremony.

The award was established by then Commander in Chief of the Continental Army, George Washington, on August 7, 1782, "to recognize enlisted men of the United States Army" for "singularly meritorious action".

The purple heart-shaped piece of cloth was sewn on the uniform over the heart. Official records exist for only three such awards prior to February 22, 1932, when by order of the President, the Purple Heart was revived in honor of the 200th anniversary of George Washington's birth.

The design of the heart-shaped medal was revised to show a bust of George Washington against a purple enamel background surrounded by a border with the Coat of Arms of Washington centered at the top. A ribbon of purple bordered with narrow white stripes is attached to the medal.

Since 1932, the Purple Heart has been awarded to officers as well as enlisted soldiers wounded in action while serving in the armed forces of the United States and also posthumously to those killed in action. Its scope has been expanded to include the Navy, Air Force, Marine Corps and Coast Guard.

John Boyd of New York City, designed the Purple Heart envelope, which is being printed on the VH press in purple and black and white paper stock in the 6 1/4 regular and Number 10 sizes. The central elements of the design of the Purple Heart are in white embossed on a heart-shaped field of purple. The Washington Coat of Arms centered above the bust also is shown in purple. The ribbon is not shown.

To the right of the design in three lines of purple type appears "The Purple Heart" and directly beneath the three lines of black type appears "1782, 1982, USA 20c".
