

Shadows Of History Cast Over N.C. Golfers

By Glenn Mays

When you tee it up in North Carolina you are surrounded not only by beauty but also the shadows of history.

Not only is that the history of the game itself but more significantly in the shadows of the history of the nation and the world.

Along North Carolina's coastal area there are many courses which provide a challenge for any golfer — from weekend duffer to touring pro.

At Duck Woods Golf Club a tee shot could far exceed the length of the first manned powered flight which is just a chip shot away at Kitty Hawk. Just a five-iron to the south at Sea Scape Golf Club you could sink a putt near the site where the English first tried in 1584 to put down roots in the New World in what has become known as the "lost colony" because of its mysterious disappearance.

Take a drive south to New Bern for such courses as Fairfield Harbour or River Bend where Tryon Palace, the home of the last royal Governor of North Carolina, graces the banks of the Trent and Neuse rivers. A pitching wedge to the east is Pine Knoll Shores and Bogue Banks where a golfer usually keeps a watchful eye out for pirates in Beaufort, Morehead City and Atlantic Beach, areas once a haven of that infamous pirate Blackbeard.

Teeing off to the south again, the golfer reaches

Wilmington where at least a dozen courses stretch out under the moss-draped cypress trees along the banks of the Cape Fear River. Historic Wilmington, once the world's largest shipping port for cotton, stands gracefully along the Cape Fear too, as if watching over the USS North Carolina, America's premier battleship in World War II. She is permanently berthed on the Cape Fear, sharing her history with thousands of visitors annually.

Just a three-iron to the west would put you in the heart of the golfing capital of the world — Pinehurst. Pinehurst No. 2, its most famous course, sweeps around the long leaf pines and over the rolling sandhills right by the center of the game's greatest legends — the World Golf Hall of Fame.

Another tee shot to the north puts you in the state capital of Raleigh, where such noted courses as North Ridge, MacGregor Downs and others grace the surroundings of this thriving Piedmont city which has been the seat of state government since the late 18th century.

To the west, perhaps a six-iron or so, is Greensboro, home of the Greater Greensboro Open. Forest Oaks, Sedgefield and Irving Park country clubs lie within the shadow of Guilford Courthouse National Military Park, where one of the decisive battles of the American Revolution occurred 200 years ago.

Just a pitching wedge to the west is Winston-Salem where Tanglewood and other picturesque golf clubs offer a challenge and beauty to golfers. All are just a short putt away from Old Salem, an early Moravian settlement in North Carolina, which has been significant in the state's history.

A four wood to the southwest is Charlotte, where such noted courses as Quail Hollow and Myers Park roll long within a chip shot of the first gold mine in America — the Reed Gold Mine — where gold "nuggets" weighing as much as 28 pounds were discovered in the early 1800's.

Teeing off again to the west, a driver puts you in the mountains — the Appalachians including the Great Smokies, Blue Ridge and other smaller ranges. Golf courses are tucked away in the valleys and others soar to almost a mile high. Their fairways roll across land which was once a hunting ground of such famous frontiersmen as Daniel Boone and John Sevier.

Golfing in the mountains can be awe inspiring as the vistas are varied and beautiful. It is even possible to play in the shadows of the oldest mountain in the world — Grandfather Mountain. Geologists say it is billion years old.

No matter where you tee it up in North Carolina, it is truly an experience to remember. From that first drive to the final putt, it's like playing out of a page in history.

Barbara Proctor — An Unlimited Success

Ms. Barbara Proctor, the tremendously successful as agency whiz, declares that she made it because she is black and a woman, in the August Ebony.

Ms. Proctor is president and founder of the nation's second largest black-owned advertising agency: Proctor and Gardner. She says, "Racism and sexism were only challenges to me, not obstacles...to view every circumstance in one's life in terms of those two small biological characteristics is very self-limiting." Her multi-million dollar, Chicago-based agency provides black consumer market concepts to clients such as Kraft, Alberto-Culver, Sears and Jewel Food Stores.

Ms. Proctor says her greatest problem was getting over the fear of taking risks. Once she hurdled that barrier she was independent enough to go after her goal without male support because she says, "...I never bought the myth that men are supposed to take care of women."
