

Strange Seafoods Tasting Party August 19

BEAUFORT — Fried squid. Yaupon tea. Marinated octopus. Sea urchin eggs. Seaweed salad. Shark stew. That's not the usual fare at a restaurant. Not even a seafood restaurant. But that will be the fare August 19 at Hampton Mariners Museum's sixth annual "Strange Seafoods Exhibition." The 1-4 pm program this year will not only let any one who dares taste the unusual morsels from the sea but also will show how these seafoods are harvested and prepared. More than 40 "strange" dishes will be served at the event which shows the vast array of unusual yet delectable gastronomic delights which can be gleaned from the sea.

The food is prepared by many of this historic seaside town's residents who have cooked, baked, sauteed, stewed or whatever these strange concoctions. However, a few of the cooks come from other coastal cities and towns.

Even a few landlubbers get in on the act, like newspaper columnist Jerry Bledsoe, well-known for his left-handed welk chowder.

During the tasting, the cooks gladly share some of their "secrets" about how they prepared the dishes.

Ike O'Neal of nearby Newport, who prepared a mussel stew for the 1981 event, confided to one "taster" that "the secret is to cook it twice."

Those who come to sample the varied offering of strange food with strange names have their favorites according to their tastes. But one first-time taster at the 1981 exhibition summed up the feelings — or tastes — of many when he said, "The food looks sort of strange but it's good."

A $2 fee will be charged to sample the seafood morsels.

For more information about the event contact the Hampton Mariners Museum, 120 Turner Street, Beaufort, N.C. 28516, telephone (919) 728-7317, or contact the Travel and Tourism Division, 430 North Salisbury Street, Raleigh, N.C. 27611, telephone (919) 733-4171.
