

La Petite Gardeners Meet

La Petite Gardeners held their September meeting, the first after an August vacation, with Mrs. Egerton on Nash Street where, following a formal opening, they heard the report of Mrs. Josephine Robinson, delegate to the Federated Garden Clubs meeting held in Raleigh in July. Mrs. Robinson, Mrs. G. McCrea, and their committee on the Yearbook and Scrap Book were congratulated for bringing back Blue Ribbons. A number of junior gardeners also attended the Federation.

The gardeners made elaborate suggestions for the Christmas Show which will be held in the auditorium of the J.J. Henderson Towers on Duke Street on Sunday, December 5. Final preparations will be made at the October meeting.

According to council members, many of the negative things they said the store would bring to the area are already starting to appear and the store has only been open a few weeks.

They cite, for example, that increased vehicle and pedestrian traffic is causing safety hazards because many children, on their way to school, have stopped using the marked crossing at Dakota Street and are now crossing close to the store.

Additionally, residents say, there has been a significant increase in the accumulation of litter, particularly around the perimeter of the food mart, the path used by students and in areas where cars park after the

Dr. Whiting Gives Last Convocation Address

By Donald Alderman
In his inaugural address of April 27, 1968, Dr. Albert N. Whiting set some high goals for North Carolina Central University. To name a few, he said:

"We should preserve student curiosity, heighten intellectual aspirations, reduce the impersonal quality of college life and prevail against mere mechanical instruction."

"We should strive vigorously to develop programs and teaching techniques geared not only for the privileged and the intellectual elite, but for those of the less developed intelligence and less advantage..."

In his last official address to students, faculty and staff Thursday morning — the State of the store is closed. Residents say that allowing the store to open against the wishes of that community takes away their right of self-determination, and they will not sit idly by and watch it happen.

"We will take leaflets to people in the surrounding areas," Davis said, and "there will be announcements in the churches and we will enlist the help of the NCCU

University address — Whiting sounded a note of accomplishment and said definitively that the university represents a "successful educational enterprise."

"...No one can dispute the fact that we are a 'realized force' a quantum contributor in our society" Whiting said to applause from a well-spirited audience.

Whiting will retire as NCCU's chief administrator June 30, 1983 after sixteen years, an after a 42-year higher education career. A search committee is currently seeking a successor.

He said he plans to move to Columbia, Maryland next year, and maybe do some research with one of the higher education institutions in community. And although we have no control over the people driving by, we highly encourage people not to do business there."

So the battle between Campus Hill residents and what they call an "unwanted intruder" rages on. And only time — and perhaps the support that others give to Campus Hill residents — can tell who will be the victor.

Washington, D.C.

During the past fifteen years, NCCU has advanced in its higher education endeavors losing very little, if any, of the school's personal quality that has been a trademark of the institution that is approaching its 73rd birthday.

A number of academic programs have been added, including master's degrees in public administration and criminal justice, as well as an undergraduate degree program in computer and informational sciences.

New construction, it seems, occurs every semester. Buildings constructed recently include the law school and a health education facility.

And enrollment, Whiting said in his speech, increased by one per cent in the last year, despite cuts in federal aid, bringing the headcount to 5,058.

Describing the state of affairs, Whiting said "In an overall sense, we are in good circumstances and can be truthfully described as an institution on the move."

In terms of problems and weaknesses, Whiting spoke of an athletic department that is plagued by deficits, inability to offer National Direct Student Loans because of a high default rate among graduates, and a six per cent cut in state funds.

He said the university has been blessed by a dedicated faculty, a devoted staff and a student leadership that has "generally been preoccupied with obtaining an education."

Whiting said he has never regretted a single day of his educational career but looks forward to the tranquility and release of retirement.

He challenged faculty and students to "focus, in the future, on the imperative of world leadership" and carry the school's motto "Truth and Service" to the "pinnacle of achievement" for humanity.

He asked the university community to judge his record of stewardship fairly and "understand that when I was either right or wrong, my interest, my motivation, my concerns were always formulated in terms of what I perceived as the best interest of NCCU."

"For what I was unable to do and for what I failed to do and for the errors made, there is but one last resort and that is to report me to God."
