"The Vanishing Tribe" Next On Tony Brown's Journal

If only about 20 percent of the African slaves reached the United States, the natural question is where did the other 80 percent go? According to Allen Counter and David Evans, two black scientists from Harvard University who have traveled deep into the South American jungle for almost a decade, the enslaved Africans were taken primarily to South America, Central America and the Carribbean.

On the upcoming edition of Tony Brown's Journal, the television series carries the viewer deep into unknown jungles of Surinam in an investigation of "The Vanishing Tribe."

Televised nationally on public television, the program will be seen in this area on WUNC, at 7:30 on Thursday, October 21.

Modern-day explorers Allen Counter and David Evans have encapsuled their historic voyages and research in a new book, I Sought My Brother (MIT Press, $19.95) and will unveil their thrilling story before the PBS audience. What cultural implications does this tribe have for the 30 million Afro-Americans living in the United States and how does the culture of the Bush people differ from the North American black culture? Does the fact that they have never been enslaved account for the difference in their culture?

Through in-depth interviews and gripping film footage, some of which has never been seen before on television, Tony Brown unfolds the Counter and Evans discovery of these essentially pure Africans who beat slavery. Will this monumental Afro-American expedition shed new light on the history and early roots of blacks in the United States? Watch this edition of Tony Brown's Journal
