All Savers Certificates Co Qualify For Extra Tax Brea

GREENSBORO — When the All-Savers Certificates were included as a tax break in the Economic Recovery Act of 1981, it was believed that their popularity would blossom into real nest eggs for many purchasers. That has proved to be true, the Internal Revenue Service says.

So, the IRS has announced that under certain circumstances All-Savers that are automatically renewed have a one-year maturity for the second year. The Economic Recovery Act of 1981 excludes from tax up to $1,000 of interest, or $2,000 on a joint return, for qualifying 1-year certificates must have a maturity of 1 year and have an investment yield to 70 percent of the yield on 52-week Treasury bills issued before the certificates were issued.

The IRS says that many financial institutions have issued All-Savers with an original 1-year maturity and a provision for automatic renewal for a second year if the funds are not withdrawn within 7 calendar days after maturity. Such renewal will not adversely affect the tax-exempt status of the interest on the certificates if the owner has a reasonable opportunity to withdraw principal and interest at the end of the original one-year maturity. The seven calendar days provision satisfies this requirement, the IRS says.

However, the IRS warns, the total interest that can be excluded from the certificates cannot exceed the original $1,000 on a single and $2,000 on a joint return.
