

Dr. Lizzie Harrell Gets Duke Med Center Promotion

Dr. Harrell

Dr. Lizzie J. Harrell has been promoted to assistant director of the Clinical Microbiology Laboratories at Duke University Medical Center.

A native of Charlotte, Dr. Harrell has been employed by the Microbiology Laboratories at Duke in various capacities since 1978. Before coming to Duke, she worked as a microbiologist at UNC in Chapel Hill and the Veterans Administration Hospital in Washington, D.C. She did her undergraduate work at North Carolina Central University. She holds a master's degree in bacteriology and immunology from UNC-Chapel Hill and a Ph.D. degree in microbiology from N.C. State University in Raleigh. Dr. Harrell is certified as a Specialist in Public Health and Medical Microbiology by the American Academy of Microbiology.

Dr. Harrell is married to Sampson E. Harrell, M.D. a family physician practicing in Durham. They have one son, Kendall, age 13.

sales over that will be charged $6.25 per hour.

Allen likes the changes in the program, saying it will help businesses as well as the Chain to depend less on tax money.

"I see (the changes) as positive," he said. "As the years go by, we — the BDCs and businesses — will be responsible for coming up with the money."

The federal contract has enabled the Chain to add two persons to the staff, bringing the number of personnel to four.

Besides Allen, 33, who holds the master's degree in business administration from Wake Forest University, they are:

Janet DeCreny, 26,

who has the MBA degree from the University of North Carolina. She serves as finance officer.

Henry Bordeaux, 51, who has previous experience with MBDA, is the contract officer.

Chris Cotant, 27, who started working with the Chain under the city contract, is the business development officer.

A secretary, Kathryn Peele, 23, and an administrative assistant, Sharon Bodrick, are employed through temporary services.

News About Social Security

Do you receive Social Security disability checks? If so, your case will be reviewed periodically to make sure you meet all requirements for benefits.

Under Social Security law, you must not only be able to do your previous work but also any other "substantial gainful activity." Generally your age, education, and work experience are taken into consideration in deciding this.

Most people can expect a review at least once every 3 years. If your condition is considered "permanent" as defined by the Social Security Administration (SSA), the review is less frequent. (Additional conditions have recently been added to the "permanent" list.)

In past years, reviews were made only in selected cases — mainly where significant medical improvement was expected or there was work activity. SSA relied primarily on beneficiaries to report medical improvement or work activity as required by law.

While many people did report, others did not. Sample studies by Social Security Administration and by the General Accounting Office showed that a substantial number of beneficiaries — up to a third in one study — were not disabled. As a result, the Congress changed the law in 1980 and required that all disability beneficiaries be reviewed periodically, starting in 1982.

Because of the seriousness of the problem, Social Security Administration actually began increasing its reviews in March 1981. During the first 13 months, about 240,000 Social Security disability beneficiaries had their eligibility reviewed. Of those nearly 107,000 — or about 44 per cent — were determined no longer eligible for benefits. This percentage is expected to drop, however, once review is completed of those cases where medical recovery is most likely.

When your case comes up for review, you and your doctor will be asked for current information and evidence concerning your condition. If additional medical evidence is needed, the agency in your state handling the review for Social Security Administration may ask you to take a special examination or test at Government expense. It is important that you cooperate fully and promptly when contacted.

You will be notified in writing of the decision made in your case.

economic justice movement is all about. It's all about getting our fair share. But, in a manner traditional with corporate America, Anheuser-Busch prefers to tip us rather than do business with us. All down the line of its operations, A-B short-changes blacks in terms of representation (e.g., of 86 Anheuser-Busch companies' directors and board members, only two are black) and in trade with such as black banks, advertising with the black media, black suppliers, and others.

Clearly, we cannot achieve full-fledged citizenship in this, our native, land if we are to be tipped with contributions instead of being admitted to the "council of free trade." There is nothing complicated about that position. All blacks should understand it beyond any doubt, commit themselves to it as being indisputable fact, and support those of us who have the courage to fight for what is merely right. We want to believe that Uncle Tom is dead. But, obviously, that is not true. Some of us who should have the guts to quit white jobs when those jobs demand the soul-out and selling out of the race obviously are coming up short. That is intolerable.

For far too long, we have suffered under the hands of corporate Americans who gladly accept our money — more than $150 billion of it annually — and return only tips to us; who then have the almighty gall to brag to us about those tips; and, in essence, argue that we should desert our leaders, or undercut them, in support of the very people who do us wrong. This is not a matter of personality — "Whatever my personality," Rev. Jackson says, "I'm not stupid!" — or of friendship. This is a matter of survival. Ours! We urge you to support Operation PUSH and the black community's boycott of Anheuser-Busch until such time that Mr. Busch agrees to meet with PUSH's negotiating team and, most important, to sign a reciprocal trade agreement which guarantees to us our fair share of trade. Nothing less is acceptable.
