

Andrea Harris Honored For Work At NCIMED

On October 21, at the Durham Convention Center, Ms. Andrea Harris was feted for her "34 years of working on behalf of improving the conditions for minority and women-owned businesses to grow and prosper," said in a letter in the program by Lewis H. Myers, chairman of The Institute.

The N.C. Institute of Minority Economic Development has grown over the years and this banquet was to honor her service.

The Institute was chartered in 1986 and has been "conducting research, developing public and private partnerships, and sponsoring programs to assist low-wealth individuals and improve the economic status of underutilized communities in North Carolina," says the program from the event.

Ms. Cynthia Marshall, senior vice president - Human Resources & Chief Diversity Officer of AT&T was the keynote speaker.

Ms. Harris has friends, family and colleagues extol her hard work and untiring effort to improve the business climate for minorities and utilized communities.
