Other people's ideals are helpful to them, but if you want to be helped you must set up your own ideals.

The only true way to make sure of the future life is to make the best of this life, and that is done by doing all the good possible.

It is a mistake to seek to do only the easy things of life. No development of character can come that way. It is as hard things are attempted and overcome that more strength, fortitude and widened experience are attained.

Someone has recently said that fullness of mental power is not reached until one has reached the age of twenty-five. It is expected that all the coming high school and college graduates throughout the country will protest that reflection upon them.

There are a few people that assert most loudly that the bible is an outgrown book and that its moral teaching is very imperfect. All the same, people generally will do well to fashion their lives after the teaching of the Ten Commandments and the Sermon on the Mount.

February is a conspicuous month in American life, for it marks the birthdays of two of the greatest men this country has ever produced—Washington and Lincoln. But to the lovesick swain who wants to send his best girl the Saint Valentine, who is supposed to control the hearts and destinies of young people, far outweigh in importance the two great American presidents.

And what subtle ingenuity and resourcefulness are expressed in the valentines that on February 14 fill the postman with dismay by their multitude unless he remembers his own youthful days and retain in his heart a tender feeling for sentimental young men and maidens.

What touching emblems and poetry appear on the valentine especially on those wonderful creations of art the buying of which make a deep hole in the young man's pocket. Blood red hearts, saucy-faced cupids, dressed in nature's garb in freezing weather and armed with bow and arrow to pierce the susceptible hearts, hands joined in loving grasp, which no divorce court can ever unloose, amorous verse full of tender adjectives and nouns and exclamations, young couples walking hand and hand together along a narrow winding path to a picturesque little church perched on a hill top—these are among the wonderful designs that the fertile mind of sympathizing man has created.

And after all, why not? This old world would be cold and gloomy without sentiment and romance, and what better time in life is there for it but that of youth, "when man's fancy lightly turns to thoughts of love." Therefore let the valentine have the right of way and long may Saint Valentine exercise his benignant rule.
