This may be an "off" year in politics, but the candidate crop apparently will be up to normal.

The local preservers of the public safety are not wholly dead, as is popularly supposed. Their latest efforts resulted in the capture of no less than three brewers of the deadly fluid, as related in today's Herald. Here's a shake on that, "Officers," and the Herald is ever with you in your efforts to bring all local operators of rum outfits to justice, and thus help to decrease the traffic in so far as is legally possible.

Attention is called to the account of the "doings" of the local city fathers at their meeting Monday night which is published in this issue. The Herald is taking for granted that it will be voicing the sentiments of the entire town and community when it says—"bully for the city fathers," or in other phraseology, the Board of Town Commissioners. Special note must be taken that a real, honest-to-goodness Clean-up Week is to be one of the main things promoted by the aforementioned Council. This is one of the primary needs of our town at the present time. The other improvements mentioned therein are to be hailed with welcoming enthusiasm also.

While other county papers have entered the political arena, the Herald still remains the same, an independent, non-partisan paper, with no political "preferences," no favoritism, the mouthpiece of no man or set of men. The Herald continues to fill its field, that of giving the news in a clear, concise way, and in this its management solicits the co-operation of its family of readers. With no other end in view than that of serving its subscribers, this paper strives after one object, that of giving its readers what they want; namely, a local paper, full of local happenings, and other good reading matter, told in an impartial way. To this end, we the management, invite your hearty co-operation, and criticism, if necessary for the betterment of the Herald.

Dignity is but a peculiar manifestation of gall. It is often the stock in trade of fools. We have those in Ahoskie who are inclined to be unduly dignified, both in everyday life and in the church. Yes, dignified to the extent of playing the fool at times. The donkey is popularly supposed to be the most stupid animal extant, except possibly the cate-eater. He is also the most dignified—since the extinction of the dodo. This thing called dignity is often a species of head-swelling, because one has had the fortune to make a little money, or got into society, or something of the sort. As a man's vision broadens, as he begins to realize what a miserable little microbe he is in that mighty immensity, adorned with the incomparable handiwork of the Power that transcends his contemplation, his dignity drains off and he feels like asking to be recognized just long enough to apologize for his existence. There are those in Ahoskie who might do well to ease up a little on the dignity stuff, and conduct themselves as if they were on a common level with those who are in reality their superiors, those who do not perpetually carry that "better-than-anybody-else" air.
