Dog Tows His Master to a Cake of Ice.

Red Wing, Minn.—When eight-year-old Pierce Seebach fell into the Mississippi river, coming to the surface 20 feet from shore, his dog plunged in and swam around until the boy seized his hind legs. Then the dog towed his master to a floating cake of ice, from which he was rescued by onlookers.

N. C. RANKS FOURTH IN BEE KEEPING IN U. S.

increase can be secured.

Mr. Sams strongly advises beginners to purchase their foundation stock of bees in their own locality in order to avoid bringing into the state "foulbrood," a dangerous disease which is prevalent in some sections. If the original stock is the ordinary black bees pure bred Italian queens should be purchased in order to improve the stock. The Italian bees are gentler, more productive and harder than the ordinary black bees. When one considers the fact that a queen lays from 2,000, to 3,000 eggs a day and a total of 80 to 100,000 or more during a season, he will readily see that the matter of "breeding up" stock is simple and easy.

There are a large number of men and women in North Carolina who make beekeeping their sole occupation. Mr. Elton Warner of Asheville, president of the North Carolina Beekeepers' Association, is one of the largest beekeepers in America. During one recent year he sold more than $35,000 worth of honey. He has colonies located both in the mountains and in the coastal plains. In addition he has approximately 1,000 colonies in Porto Rica.

Dr. E. E. Kirkham, formerly health officer of Martin county, last year averaged 135 pounds surplus for 100 colonies for his spring flow. After the spring honey flow was over, Dr. Kirkham moved 40 colonies to the soy bean section near Terra Ceil, 20 miles distant from his home. These 40 colonies produced an average surplus of 117 pounds during the soy bean blooming season, making an average for the entire year of 252 lbs. each for these colonies. Figured at 25c per pound, these colonies produced more than $80.00 worth of honey each, during the season.

One of the best known beekeepers in North Carolina is W. J. Martin, who was for years Raleigh correspondent for a number of papers in the state. Martin risked an interview with Apiculturist Sams on one occasion several years ago and shortly thereafter began his bee career with one colony. Later he paid 75c for a stray swarm from which during that season he produced $14.00 worth of honey. When Martin left aileigh and went to Wilmington to devote his entire time to apiculture, he purchased 132 hives from an eastern beekeeper, transferred them to modern hives and was on his way. He produced more than $2,000 worth of honey the first year, this amount more than covering his entire investment in bees, equipment and supplies. Martin has 300 hives at present and his income from honey this year will be several thousand dollars. He is so infatuated with the game that he recently declared that he would not trade his bee business for a newspaper.

One North Carolina woman, a widow, raised and educated her family from her income produced solely by beekeeping.

Mrs. Chas. Robinson of Martin county teaches school during the school term but her income from 35 colonies of bees last year was more than her salary for the school term.

Mrs. J. M. Edmondson is the wife of an automobile mechanic at Everetts. She has 115 colonies of bees and makes more money than her husband does.

C. D. Duvall, a former resident of Idaho, is now a beekeeper in Martin county, having one-half interest in 500 colonies. He and his partner have 250 colonies in one apiary at Williamston which averaged last year over 35 pounds of comb honey. The yield of comb honey is nothing like as great as the yield where the honey is extracted and the foundation replaced in the making of the wax is a tedious process for the bees and much time is lost which is devoted to the production of honey where wax foundations are supplied.

Mr. R. D. Carr of Magnolia declares that during the past 35 years there have been only three years when there has been anything like a failure of the honey yield. He figures three good years and two medium years in each five. He declares that more profit can be secured from 300 colonies of bees than from 160 acres of cultivated land.

A number of beekeepers in North Carolina have gone into the business of breeding bees and queens for market and they are doing a thriving business. They are not only supplying foundation stock and pure bred queens to beekeepers in North Carolina but are doing considerable business in pound packages of bees with beekeepers in the north. Many beekeepers in the north who have colonies that have wintered poorly or are naturally weak strengthen them early in the spring with a pound or two of bees purchased elsewhere. These bees enable the colony to build up very rapidly for the honey season. These breeders of bees and queens do not attempt to produce an surplus honey directing all of the energy and efforts of their colonies to the production of bees and queens.

The North Carolina Beekeepers' Association, with a membership at present of more than 140 apiculturists, is doing much to promote the bee industry in the state and its efforts, together with those of Mr. Sams and a number of county farm demonstration agents who have become interested in bees, are responsible for a very rapid development which is taking place in the industry at the present time. In all probability, it will be very few years before the honey production in North Carolina reaches 50,000,000 pounds a year—and the industry will be developed to the extent of not more than 50 per cent of its theoretical possibilities then.

PHILADELPHIA O. K.'S BOBBING

Teachers With Shorn Locks Need Not Fear Jobs, Says School Head.

Philadelphia.—The Philadelphia board of education is worrying little about a question that has agitated other communities, namely, whether schoolteachers will be permitted to bob their hair if they desire. The matter rests entirely with the teachers and the younger ones with curtailed locks need not fear dismissal, Edwin C. Boome, superintendent of schools, said here.

Macaw Made Trouble.

Columbia, Pa.—When a Peruvian macaw bit a Pomeranian puppy on the ear at the home of Clifton Shutter in Wrightsville, the dog ran between Shutter's legs and upset him as he was taking a tray of half-hatched prize Minorca eggs from an incubator to turn them. Shutter's body flew in one direction and the tray of eggs in another. The man sustained painful wounds to his head, and every egg sustained internal injuries.
