

JIMMIE ANNOUNCES HIMSELF FOR OFFICE

Mister Editor:

I hereby announce myself for a candydade fer office on any ticket, an' subject to the actuns of any ol' primary, likewise the approval of Squire Biter, an' jest any durned ol' party that can hand over the goods. Yourn fer pollyticks, JIMMIE.

Now Mister Editor, the above kard is what I want you to insert, an' when I get that thar office I'll remember you with a generous cot of store backer, fer yer liberality an' support, yessiree, shore as kraut I will. Now Mister Editor, I want to say right here, as how I am a doin' of this here stunt as a matter of bein' loyal to this here commonwealth an' a high developed sense of duty an' I've got the support of Bill Surkeys an' Cy' Watson fer shore, an' Deacon Josh, he lows as how I may as well count on in case Squire approves an' you know I ain't the man fer goin' into a thing in no half-way manner, no-siree, I ain't, so when I give away to the pressure what has bin a tryin' to push me into pollyticks fer so long why Mister Editor, I jest wolloped up my sleeves, spit in my hands, took a fresh chaw of Cy' Watson's store backer what some travelin' man had give him fer a advertisin' sample, and tackled the job whole soul, jest the same as diggin' sassafras roots or breakin' a stubborn steer on a warm spring day. Yessiree, that's the way I pitched in an' I want to tell you as how if they was a heap more like me hereabouts this here burg would a bin on the map a long time ago. But fo'ks jest will let thigs drag along, an' up to a couple of years ago, they warn't nobody knowed they was sich a place as Sassafras Ridge, much less, a man what could write up itums to the papers, an' I mout not a found hit out myself if you hadn't a happened along that day an' give me that thar brand new pen what writes fer its self thet foolin' with no ink bottle jest to put a little in onst in a while an' screw down the cap agin. But thigs jest will crap out, an' so here I am a goin' to serve this here commonwealth in the capacity of office, an' if I can't lick any man what don't vote fer me, I bet a fresh chaw of store backer they's them here what can, an' as fer the wimin I ain't narey bit uneasy about ther votes, an' I can't help a regrettin' that a keen sense of modesty keeps me from sayin' why, but jest wait 'til I take the stump an' then you can see why.

Yourn fer office, JIMMIE.

THE FARMER

I do not know of any individual who exhibits more faith than the farmer.

The city people do not realize this until they get out in the country.

In considering the farmer, bear in mind that he spends approximately eight months raising a crop, for which he generally does not have a single order until he has harvested it and that he does not know what the price will be at which he must sell it.

In other words, in early spring, the farmer says "I will plow and fertilize this field; I will plant it with grain; I will cultivate it and if the weather is favorable, I will have a good yield by the end of summer. Then I will harvest my crop and I will offer it on the market. I hope the price will be high enough to repay me for all my labor."

How many in the cities would care to operate on that basis?

As salesmen and advertisers, we grow discouraged if we do not see tangible results from our efforts each day.

The farmer's labor of a whole season may be dissipated by a few days of unfavorable weather just previous to or during the harvest.

Yet there are millions of farmers in this country who are following the plow year after year.
