NOTICE OF RE-SALE OF LAND

Under Deed of Trust. By virtue of the power and authority conferred upon me by a certain Deed of Trust executed by Scarboro Barrett to me, the undersigned trustee, on the 9th day of July, 1920, and recorded in the office of Register of Deeds for Hertford County, N. C., in Book 65, page 422, I will offer for sale to the highest bidder for cash, in front of the Post Office in the Town of Murfreesboro, N. C., between the hours of 11 o'clock A. M. and 2 o'clock P. M. on the 15th day of July, the following real property, to-wit: The brick house and lot situate in the town of Murfreesboro, N. C., now occupied by J. A. Campbell as a residence, bounded by Williams, Fifth and Broad Streets of said town and by the lands of Harry N. Deans, and known as the old "Peter Williams Home Place."

This June 10th, 1922.
STANLEY WINBORNE, Trustee.

Tired

"I was weak and run-down," relates Mrs. Hula Burnett, of Dalton, Ga. "I was thin and just felt tired, all the time. I didn't rest well. I wasn't ever hungry. I knew, by this, I needed a tonic, and as there is none better than—"

CARDUI

The Woman's Tonic

"... I began using Cardui," continues Mrs. Burnett. "After my first bottle, I slept better and ate better. I took four bottles. Now I'm well, feel just fine, eat and sleep, my skin is clear and I have gained and sure feel that Cardui is the best tonic ever made."

Thousands of other women have found Cardui just as Mrs. Burnett did. It should help you.

At all druggists.

Now that they carry booze by airplane there is a great overhead expense.

Nearly fifty thousand million dollars is invested in insurance on the lives of Americans.

FEARED BAD LUCK PERIODS

Asteca Believed That Evil Fates Ruled World During the Last Five Days of Year.

The Aztec calendar consisted of a year of 18 months of 20 days each, and a closing period of five days, into which it was believed all the bad luck of the year was crowded. No one started upon a journey during these five days, for fear some misfortune would befall him; no woodcutter ventured into the forest to hew wood during this period, lest wild beasts should devour him; the houses were left unswayed; the housewives made no pottery vessels; children so unfortunate as to be born on one of these five days were by that very fact predestined to misfortune for the rest of their lives.

The next, and among the Aztecs the only time period higher than the year, was the xihuitmolpa, or cycle of 52 years. It was held that at the close of one of these periods would some day come the destruction of the world.

On the last night of the xihuitmolpa fires were extinguished on the hearths, and the inhabitants of Tenochtitlah (City of Mexico) moved out of the city and took up positions on the surrounding hills, waiting feverishly either for the destruction of the world or, in the event of sunrise, the dawn of another xihuitmolpa. Once the sun had arisen, however, great were the rejoicings. Fires were rekindled and the crisis was over for another 52 years.

NONE CAN EXPLAIN "AURORA"

Northern Lights Said to Be Due to Passage of Electricity Through the Air.

The aurora borealis (or northern lights) is occasionally seen in the north temperate zone and frequently in the polar regions. It is said to be due to the passage of electricity through the rarefied air of the arctic zone. The name "aurora borealis" was first used by Casseandl, who, in 1621, observed one in France, and wrote a description of it. The "aurora" is periodic in its manifestations, the finest displays being at intervals of 60 years, and less marked ones at intervals of 10 or 11 years. It is also asserted that these greater and lesser displays correspond with the increase and decrease of spots on the sun. The phenomenon is generally manifested in the following way: A dim light appears on the horizon shortly after twilight, and gradually assumes the shape of an arch, having a pale yellow color, with its concave side turned earthward. From this arch streams of light shoot forth, passing from yellow to green and then to brilliant violet. The name aurora australis (or southern lights) is applied to a similar phenomenon visible in the vicinity of the South pole.

When Joking Is Dangerous.

Husbands should be careful how they spring jokes at the table. And wives should be alert on guard against the consequences of a surprise that amounts to a shock in certain cases—such as that at New York recently, for instance.

Men who toss off jokes at the table and cause their wives to laugh so suddenly that they pull a piece of meat into the trachea and choke to death have a grave responsibility. Of course, the habitual joker who gets a fresh stock every week runs no such risks. His wife is immune to laughter at his "funny cracks," and stands in no danger.

But fellows who are pleasant only once in a long time, and who "pull a joke" perhaps twice in a lifetime, should time their efforts so that their wives have not a mouthful of meat handy to pull into their windpipes. For that is not what windpipes are for, and their resent intrusion of solids.—Exchange.

Joke on Famous Composer.

A certain newly rich person with more money than culture called on M. Massenet and said that he had seen his photograph in a paper and had read that he was "a clever pianist." Would M. Massenet play a few pieces at a little party? He would be well paid of course!

The world-famous musician was greatly amused. "Certainly!" he replied. "What night?" "Thursday." "Thursday? What a pity! I am engaged on Thursday. But I can give the address of a friend—an excellent pianist, who can play all the modern dances beautifully."

So saying, Massenet gave the unfortunate newly rich the address of—Saint-Saens! Obviously the victim of Massenet's joke had never heard of Saint-Saens, for he called on the distinguished composer and was promptly kicked out. Saint-Saens brooded over the insult for some hours before he saw the joke.

Belong in High Places.

As with the evergreens so it is with all trees that dare the heights. Some, like the hemlocks, remain far below. The little gray birches stop in the pastures of the foothills. The high, clear air of the range is not for them. The yellow birches fare on to the lower slopes of the high hills. There they quit; but the canoe birches go on. The great trees of the lower reaches of the bowlder path are these, their paper-white bark showing through all dark woods of the north. Then climb valiantly. It is as if the trees were thrilled with that eager desire to reach the summit which possesses all mountaineers.

The Three Holbeins

By ANNE WHITFIELD

Copyright, 1922, Western Newspaper Union.

Zerubbabel Clay had crossed from Liverpool to New York in an ordinary cabin because it was impossible to secure a private stateroom at short notice. He was fortunate in finding his roommate an intelligent, inoffensive, educated man, and, being of a kindly disposition when his suspicions were not aroused, he became quite confidential with him.

He was particularly drawn to him because he found Mr. Etham interested in art, and he told him about his private collection of old masters. The men exchanged cards, and Mr. Etham agreed to call and inspect the galleries.

About the middle of the second half of the voyage Mr. Etham received a wireless which gave him great distress. His mother was dying in Syracuse, and it was a race against time to get to her death-bed in time to speak to her.

"You'll make it," said Mr. Clay, encouragingly. "You got a taxi at the docks and race for the Grand Central. Plenty of trains."

"I know," said Mr. Etham, "but they'll take an hour clearing my cabin trunk. I wonder whether you'd do me a great kindness. I hesitate to ask it, but—well, I haven't seen her for three years, and I can't bear—"

"That's all right, Etham," said Mr. Clay. "I'll do it. What is it?"

"Why, just pass my trunk through for me as your own," said Mr. Etham. "I've got some labels in my suitcase. I'll put your name on it, and then I can send to your house for it."

"My dear boy, I'll be delighted to," answered Zerubbabel Clay, and he thought no more about the matter.

"What's in here?" asked the customs officer.

"Oh, the usual stuff," replied Mr. Clay.

He was surprised when the officer proceeded to turn the entire contents of the trunk out upon the planks. He was still more surprised when he drew a sharp instrument from his pocket and calmly ripped off the bottom. He was astounded when three ancient pictures were disclosed lying there.

"You've been done," said the officer. "Etham was trying to rush these through the customs without paying duty. We know all about it. They're Holbeins, and our representative in London apprised them before Etham shipped them. They're going to cost you fifteen thousand dollars apiece duty and fine—unless you prefer to forfeit them."

"But it's Etham's trunk!" shouted Zerubbabel Clay.

The officer pointed to the label, and Mr. Clay thought hard. He was a man of quick decisions.

"All right, I'll write you a check," he said quietly.

A week later Mr. Etham called at Mr. Clay's house. He was quite unrepentant.

"Sorry they were wise to fit Mr. Clay," he said, "but of course I'll let you have your forty-five thousand back. I can let you have a check at once. The fact is I can make a tidy little profit on a sale to a private customer, even as things stand."

Mr. Clay was not a fanatic. He grumbled a little and produced the Holbeins.

"Yes, I picked them up in an old country house," Etham said. "No question as to their genuineness. I'm very much obliged."

Mr. Clay thought hard. He was a man of quick decisions, and he hadn't a Holbein.

"How much are you going to get for them?" he asked.

"Seventy-five thousand," answered Etham.

"I'll give you seventy."

Mr. Etham laughed. "I wouldn't take eighty," he replied. "I've promised my client—"

He went away with Mr. Clay's check for thirty-five thousand dollars in his pocket, representing the difference, and Mr. Clay framed his Holbeins in fifteenth century oak and hung them in his hall, where they were very much admired.

It was not until the depreciation of securities that Mr. Clay found himself in a hole. He had to raise fifty thousand immediately. He hated to let his Holbeins go, but—

He was a man of quick decisions. He sent for Seacream.

Seacream examined them carefully. "A clever imposture, Mr. Clay," he said. "Done by Vanatello. He works for a lot of dealers. I've employed him myself. Almost perfect—but this brushwork gives him away."

"Well, you happen to be dead wrong," sneered Mr. Clay, "because the customs duty came to just forty-five thousand. Get out of my house!"

And he was so offended that he mortgaged his house instead. Mr. Clay was a man of quick decisions.

Two Fighting Fishes.

One of the features of the swordfish is that it has a long high fin which extends nearly the whole length of the back. The swordfish should not be confused with sawfish. The latter fish is furnished with a long bony snout set with heavy spines or teeth readily suggesting a rude saw. The sawfish, which is related to the sharks and rays, is a bad fellow among other fish and uses his saw in a "red-handed" way. But a swordfish, because of his superior swordsmanship will generally smite him "hip and thigh" or hamstring him or puncture him in some other disagreeable way.
