NORTH CAROLINA STATE FAIR

Raleigh, August 24.—The North Carolina State Fair will be held on the old grounds this year, but the buildings and the grounds will present a far different appearance from what they did last year, for Mrs. Edith Vanderbilt, in carrying out her idea that the grounds should be beautiful, has directed the management not only to plant flowers, shrubbery and fall bulbs at many places on the grounds, and has induced the North Carolina florists to aid in this part of the beautification work, but she has also directed the purchase of several hundred gallons of paint. The old buildings will be given a liberal treatment of this white paint and they will all be trimmed off in a blue which is Mrs. Vanderbilt's own selection.

Comfort and rest stations for men and women have been located at many places on the grounds during the past summer. Sewerage connections have been made, and additional watering places installed.

In addition to these changes the crowds which will throng into the fair grounds during the week in October will find that there are much better arrangements for getting lunch and other meals during the day. In an effort to make it possible for the church societies, schools and other societies, schools and others who will have charge of these stands to make a liberal profit and at the same time serve a good meal, the number of stands and lunching places has been materially reduced. An effort is being made to eliminate the smaller sandwich stands, in order that the bigger stands can handle the business better.

All of the eating places this year will be located in tents on the right of the fair grounds as one enters the gates. The use of tents was necessitated both because of the need of the room in the buildings for the bigger exhibits which are looked for this year, and also in order to give those wanting something to eat more space in which to partake of a lunch. Likewise the question of sanitation played a part in the decision to eliminate all of the restaurants and lunch stands from the buildings. There will be more room, so better sanitation will be possible.

All of the grounds around and in the tents will be treated with some kind of a dust layer so that one will not have to eat any large part of the proverbial peck of dirt one is supposed to eat during a lifetime, while lunching at the fair grounds.

THE CARRY-OVER OF THE COTTON CROP

In a letter to the Herald, Congressman H. S. Ward, advises that the figures show the carry-over of cotton in the United States on July 31, 1922, was 2,828,186 bales, compared with 6,534,360 bales for 1921, and 3,563,162 bales for 1920. Based on the average consumption for the past year, the mill stocks, 1,215,108 bales, will meet the consumptive requirements of the domestic mills for ten weeks.

The above information is very valuable to cotton farmers.
