

TRAINING SCHOOL IS DOING A GOOD WORK

State Department Representative Talks To Faculty And Students

(BY JAS. R. WALKER)

"O watch, fight and pray for you know not the day nor the hour when the Son of Man cometh." As far as the school goes, this biblical phrase could be fittingly and truthfully expressed as O, watch, fight and pray for you know not the day nor the hour when the state officials cometh. Only the other day when every heart seemed in perfect tune with the morn's sunrise, when nature gave every evidence of a perfect day, there was seen from the window a somewhat strange figure walking leisurely about the school campus. The figure proved to be that of professor G. H. Ferguson of the State department of education who had come to interrupt the tranquillity of the hour.

We were indeed glad to see and have Prof. Ferguson with us. We realize in him a broad, sympathetic man whose criticisms are always constructive and whose advice is always sane. He spoke very encouragingly to us, and promised to do all in his power to help us build up the kind of training school needed in our community. In his private talk to the teachers, he said that the county training schools had not as yet standardized their high school departments. We were thrilled when he spoke so encouragingly of helping us standardize our high school department. After he had gone, we said, one to the other, "Did not our hearts burn within us as he talked to us?"

If we have any regret at all it is this, that after inspecting the various rooms and departments, he asked, "Where are your high school students?" Yes, fathers and mothers, it hurt us to the core, but we had to tell the truth and say, they are yet in the cotton and peanut fields. We would to God, that the parents of the community would realize that cotton, tobacco and peanuts, harvested at the expense of the education of the children, cost a thousand times more than they are worth. Our advice is, send the children to school and especially the high school children. We say so—the county says so and the state says so. Won't you let us have them?

These are busy times at the school. Everybody is working hard preparing for both the county and state fair. The school is planning to put on a number one exhibit at the fair. In fact, we are expecting to win first prize in school exhibits. The agricultural teacher is working both night and day training his boys to take part in a stock and corn judging contest that is to be held at the state fair. We are planning to "Bring the bacon home," when we come back from Raleigh. On the coming Friday night a program has been planned, the proceeds of which will go to aid the boys in going to Raleigh. Come one, come all.

FISHING FOR WILD OATS

(By Susie Parker, Powellville, Eighth Grade Pupil)

Once there lived an old fisherman by the seaside in a little hut. He lived alone and did all his cooking and housework himself, for his wife had died and left him with an only child, a little girl, who died. Now this old fisherman had a few hens which he kept for pets. It grieved him very much, when, one morning after feeding them he counted them and found that two of them were missing. At once he formed the conclusion that wildcat was eating them as there were many wildcats in that section of the country.

That night he baited a large hook, fastened this to one end of a long rope, hung the rope over a limb of the tree in which his hen roosted, tied the other end to his wrist and went to bed, forgetting to shut the door.

The wildcat really came, gulped down both bait and hook, thus waking the fisherman, who began to pull in his catch. When the frenzied animal felt the pull he ran toward the hut, climbed the porch vine, and leaped into the room.

The fisherman had not expected this and it gave him a shock. He soon regained his wits, however, and began to think how to escape the claws of the wildcat. There was an axe near the door which he kept for cutting his fishing rods. He thought of this and edged toward it meanwhile getting a few scratches from the wildcat. He picked up the axe, swung it around his head and with one blow he rendered the fierce animal dead at his feet. Nervous and trembling he went out to see his hens. They were safe but the old man made a vow to himself that he would take his hens to bed with him before he would fish for another wildcat.
