MARKET YOUR HOGS FOR BETTER PRICE

County Agent Says Sell On The Hoof
In The Larger Eastern
Markets

A good many farmers in this county have some extra pork for sale each year. As a rule this surplus is passed on our local butchers at very low prices or the meat is cured and sold as hams, shoulders, and middlings, sometime during the spring and summer months.

Either of these practices is wasteful so far as the farmer is concerned. Unless he gets a lot more than the average local price offered, for to begin with the hog only dresses out about average of two-thirds its live weight and then if the farmer cures it the meat loses a good bit in weight.

Let's take for example a two hundred pound hog. If he is corn fed and solid he will probably dress about 135 pounds. All right say for sake of illustration, that the local market will take the hog at 12 1-2 cents, then you have $16.20 for your hog and your leaf fat and liver, heart, etc. will just about pay cost of butchering.

If you cure this hog and can sell the cured meat direct to a family who wants it you may be able to get two or three dollars more for the hog, but in this case you have got to take the chance of the meat spoiling and then there is also some expense and trouble attached to curing meat.

What then is the solution to this tangle? Fit ten your hogs so as to be ready for market by late February or early March, and club together on car lot shipments. Hogs will sell on an average in March on the Baltimore and Philadelphia markets, for as much per pound live weight as you can get for dressed hogs, locally, in December and January. So you see when you dress the hog and sell it locally you lose on an average about one-third the value of the hog. Then, too, you can easily glut the local market, while you are not at all likely to glut the eastern stock markets.

Hogs have averaged above ten cents per pound on hoof for the last ten years in Baltimore and Philadelphia, during the months of March. Get your extra hogs ready for market by that time and save your self the worry and embarrassment of trying to sell pork on an already glutted local market, and incidentally get about one-third more for your meat. We have made tentative arrangements already for the shipment of three cars of hogs from the county next March, and if you are interested in this, get in touch with me at once and I will be glad to assist you in working up a car lot shipment from your shipping point.

STEAM HEAT FOR COUNTY PROPERTY

Commissioners Award Contract To Suffolk Concern For Installation
Of Plant

Eighteen hundred and fifty-eight dollars will be invested in a modern heating plant for the county courthouse and jail, by Hertford County Commissioners. The contract has been given to Wilson and Company of Suffolk, Va.

The contract calls for immediate installation and the complete plant will be furnished by the contracting company, with the exception of quarters for the boiler and furnace. These will be placed in the old pump house on the courthouse grounds.

All of the offices in the courthouse will be heated by the new heating system, and coal stoves will be discarded. Hard coal is scarce, and the county has none on hand, and has little prospect of securing enough for the winter's supply. With the new plant installed, bituminous coal will be used, at a saving of several dollars on each ton burned.

Professor E. P. Dixon, formerly principal of the Ahoskie school, was elected Alamance County chairman of the State Teachers' Assembly at the first meeting of the teachers in that county last Friday.

Practically every industrial plant in North Carolina is in operation and many of them are working overtime, according to monthly survey of conditions issued Monday by the United States Employment Agency in Raleigh.

On Monday night an attempt was made to wreck the home of an A. C. L. employee at Rocky Mount. A huge explosive was placed under the house.
