ALLAN SIMPSON COLLAR POSEUR IN MOVIES NOW

Monday and Tuesday—Man Whose Face Has Been Seen in Advertisements Plays in "The Exciters"

He can't walk along a public highway without being recognized! Even Strangers say "Hello" to him with the assurance that they know him well, but can't place him. His face is almost as famous as Thomas Meighan's—yet few people know his name. His likeness stares at one from billboards, electric signs, subway cards and store windows, and now in front of motion picture theatres.

His name is Allan Simpson, poseur for nationally known collars, cigarettes and hats. Now he is a member of the supporting cast of the Paramount production of "The Exciters", co-starring Bebe Daniels and Antonio Moreno, which is on view at the RICHARD THEATER next Monday and Tuesday.

When Simpson applied for work at Paramount's Long Island studio, the casting director frankly told him that he was hired because of his classic features only, and not because of his histrionic ability which had not been proved. Some time later, when Simpson was given a part in Allan Dwan's production of "The Glimpses of the Moon," the casting director was pleasantly surprised. Simpson played a somewhat minor role in this picture with such taste and discrimination that he was immediately signed for work in "The Exciters."

It might be imagined by those who do not know Mr. Simpson that he is conceited. But Simpson can't help but know he's good looking. He's been receiving fine salaries from various manufacturers just for reproduction of his features in connection with commercial products long enough to realize that fact.

"The Exciters" is a superb picture of a popular stage play directed by Maurice Campbell and including in its supporting cast Burr McIntosh, Diana Allen, Bigelow Cooper, Cyril Ring, Ida Darling, Jane Thomas, George Backus, and other players of note.
