Mr. Jones' Valentine Story

By HOWARD FIELDING

When I have found that girl, i rite the story myself."

The Diplomatic Woman.

The Diplomatic Woman.

To her man is simply an open book, and she place upon his weaks needs as upon a harp with a thousand strings. With her re-marriage is merely a matter of selection. She decides upon a man, and he has no more chance of secape than the mouse in the claws of a cat. Apparently she hangs upon his words. She appliands his sentiments, She laughts at his pokes. If he admires domesticity she hives with a cook book in her hand. If he is pious, she dotes on church work. If he is sporty she meanwings the race card and recites it for his benefit, but always and at all times she keeps the
