Transplant Fruit Trees in Fall.

16 Practical Farmer says: "Dig The Provident Partner says: The suitable these, set the tree and B1 in the soil, ramining i in as tight as possible, until the hole is three parts built. Then both is soft with hole is failt. Then both soils away, and point in more. An hour or two later (1) the minimum of the soil without conting. It will not take many (i) the remainder of the soft without counting. It will not take many oxys to know whether the trans-planting is to be a success or poit. If it is, the remaining leaves that were not cut off will drop clean from the stem slightly tapped. If they fail to fall off, withering on the tree instead, it is a doubtful sign, and a good pruning will be in order. But as a matter of agreemence, I have found the losses from early pruning almost none, and can freely recom-mend the practice."
