NIAGARA FALLS.

Canada has a right perhaps to claim a larger share in the possession of Niagara Falls than the United States as it is over the Canadian or Horse Shoe Falls, that four fifths of the water falls. Goat Island with 1300 ft in width, parts the river just above the falls; on the left is the American Falls with its width of 1,060 feet; on the right is the Horse Shoe Falls with a curve 3,000 feet, making a total width of a mile. To watch that glorious body of water descend 160 feet over the falls, with its ceaseless roar makes one realize how insignificant he is and reduces him to silence, and to awe.

The river thunders as it goes over the rocks, and thick mist rises. The sun paints all the shades of the rainbow in the mist. The waters bubble and seethe and foam in their bed below. Just here I am reminded that photographers, artists and writers have failed to describe Niagara Falls so, I will not attempt further. Even Mr. Dooley says one would have to bankrupt the English language.

The return trip was down the Canadian Side, past the monument erected to Gen. Isaac Brock, who fell in the encounter with the Americans on Oct. 1812 and on down to Queenstown, where we were ferried over to Lewiston, and returned to Toronto where we joined the balance of the party.
