

ASHEVILLE CITIZEN.

R. M. FURMAN, JORDAN STONE, J. D. CAMERON, EDITORS.

TUESDAY MORNING, NOV. 1, 1887.

Cannot the great city of New York sustain a decent daily newspaper? The leading papers of that city seem to indicate the contrary, if the matter they supply is in answer to a demand by their readers.

"Trust" combinations of capital are getting popular. We have the "Standard Oil Trust," the "Sugar Refinery Trust," the "Whiskey Monopoly Trust," and now it is proposed that all the funny men of the press are to combine and run one or more huge funny papers. The word "trust" is the captivity we suppose.

Jay Gould's wealth brings him trouble sometimes. The friends of the condemned anarchists expect him to use it to buy or corrupt justice, and save them from the halter; and he is in daily receipt of letters demanding his interposition, and threatening death if he fails to do as demanded. Hence his sudden departure for Europe to get out of the way before the day of doom.

GENERAL JACKSON'S SPEECH.

The Atlanta Constitution of the 29th, after an interview with the orator of the day at Macon, extracts the following as the sum and substance of the intent of the speech:

"The eloquence and sincerity of the speech will be questioned by no one. General Jackson is a man of illustrious record, and of the highest character. He spoke his earnest and honest convictions.

The speech sifted down presents two points. First, that the South did not go into war to protect slavery, but went in to defend the principle of State sovereignty with the full knowledge that slavery would be imperiled even if the South were victorious in the war. Second, that the principle of local government is still at war with the principle of centralized power.

This struggle is not local to America, but it is being fought wherever human government has been erected. It is being fought notably in England, where Gladstone appeals for a decentralization of power and the establishment of home rule in Ireland. General Jackson believes that local sovereignty is the true principle of government, and that it will finally triumph. Not in America alone, or especially, but wherever human governments are being improved. The Lincoln-Davis sentence of his speech simply amounts to the statement that when this triumph of local government, or home rule, is established over centralized power, that Mr. Davis, who stood for State sovereignty in the memorable conflict, will be vindicated over Mr. Lincoln, who stood for centralized power. General Jackson hastens to say that this personal allusion was purely incidental, and testifies to the high and earnest admiration he has of Mr. Lincoln's character as a patriot, statesman and a man.

General Jackson only states what all thinkers in the South recognize to be facts, that the South did not fight to protect slavery, and that it did fight to maintain those rights of self-government claimed to be guaranteed under the Federal Constitution. In saying this much, the speaker made no false representation.

But his error and his wrong was in presenting his views in such a time and in such a presence.

The time and the occasion were not such as to have justified the presentation of the views that were the subject of conflict, and physically speaking, the victims of doubt. What was not effectuated by the noblest contest of arms, will not be brought to pass by querulous complaint or clamorous denunciation. And the presence was most inopportune because Mr. Davis stood before the audience, the concrete expression of the ideas and principles which had been submitted to the ordeal of battle and had the decision pronounced against them. Such principles are immortal, and physically force can never suppress the truth. But their ultimate vindication rests with time and the progress of events. And the time is not now, when the passions of those taking the opposite position in the bloody debate are ready to fly back, on provocation, to their previous hostile attitude. It was easy, with Mr. Davis before him, for the speaker to present him as the living embodiment of imperishable through discredited principles, at whose call the South, with recuperated strength, might gather up its limbs for any trial of principles. But in doing so Mr. Davis and the South were placed in false attitude. Mr. Davis himself, as an unparoled rebel, may not consider himself bound to silence if he had chosen to break it. But he is morally sponsor for the good faith of the South. He cannot encourage a violation of that prudential as well as honorable system under virtue of which the recollections of internecine strife are dying out, in the perfection of which the very ideas of Gen. Jackson, so passionately presented, must ultimately prevail as the real fundamental ideas of the American Constitution.

The principles of local self-government and State sovereignty concern the North equally with the South. No State and no people, claiming to maintain a republican form of government, can afford to sacrifice them. But this cannot and ought not to be obtruded in an inopportune way and at inopportune time, when it is so easy to inflame passion, excite uneasy suspicion, or give a sharp and ready weapon for political advantage.

DEVOURED BY SHARKS.

A Florida Mail Carrier Torn to Pieces by Man-Eaters.

A Jacksonville (Fla.) special says: James E. Hamilton, mail-carrier between Miami and Lake Worth was devoured by sharks at Hillsboro inlet Tuesday. Hamilton was a stout, athletic young man, and carried the mail a distance of seventy-five miles, walking the beach most of the way. The inlet is a dangerous crossing, the dark waters of the Everglades meeting the ocean tides and producing heavy seas. Sharks of the most ravenous kind abound.

When he reached the middle of the inlet the sharks flocked about the boat, leaping ten feet or more out of the water in their eagerness to get at human flesh. Hamilton fought them with his ears, but soon both were bitten off and dashed out of his hands. Then they assailed the boat, tearing away huge pieces of the gunwale. Soon it began to sink and he was thrown head-first into the mass of heavy waves.

One shriek of agony and all was over. The sea was dyed for yards with his life blood. Screeching parties were sent out, but nothing found. The tragedy was such a horrible one that no mail carrier over that route has yet been carried.

Oysters served in every shape at Turner & Bronson's after the 8th inst. The lovers of this delicious article will remember this fact.

Chronic Looseness of the Bowels.

Results from imperfect digestion. The cause lies in the torpidity of the liver. A regular habit of body can be secured by taking Simmons Liver Regulator to rid digestion, to stimulate the dull and sluggish liver, and rid the system of excessive and poisonous bile. The Regulator corrects acidity of the stomach, cures dyspepsia and insures regularity of the bowels alike free from laxity or costiveness.

Up to a few weeks ago I considered myself the champion Dyspeptic of America. During the years that I have been afflicted I have tried almost every regular habit of body. I have claimed to be a specific for Dyspepsia in the hope of finding something that would afford permanent relief. I had about made up my mind to abandon all medicines when I noticed an endorsement of Simmons Liver Regulator for a prominent Georgian, a jurist whom I knew, and concluded to try its effects. I have used it for two bottles, and am satisfied that I have struck the right thing at last. It felt its beneficial effects almost immediately. Unlike all other preparations of a similar kind, no special instructions are required as to what one shall or shall not eat. This fact alone ought to command it to all troubled with Dyspepsia.
