The scenes of the last Congressional election in this District are fresh in the recollection of all, and we doubt not that the good sense of the Whigs, of the District Regiment called for from this State. will at once convince them of the propriety of holding a Convention and selecting a candidate who shall be recognized by the whole party as the candidate of the party. We know not a single aspirant to the office, nor have we spoken to any one on the subject of a Convention, but in the exercise of our own convictions of right and policy, we urge upon 'the Whigs of the District the importance of holding a Convention for the purpose above suggested. The time when, and the place where, the Convention should be held are not matters for us to settle. We have discharged our duty in pointing out this course.

General Gaines' disclaimer of the publication of the letter of General Taylor, and which I mentioned last night, proves to be incorrect. General Gaines has written a letter to the Secretary of War, justifying his publication of the letter, on the ground that General Taylor's conduct had been misrepresented in Congress, and required explanation and defence. It is still said that General Gaines will place his views

What a happy union of surrow and delight is What a happy union of surrow and delight is there in announcing the death of one like this-one whose pratting little tongue had never once offended, and whose young and tender heart was unknown to the corruption of every sin. True, when we behold the little innocent ensitetuded in the gloomy pull, and handed down into the cold eisembers of the tomb, we are instinctively forced to grieve; but when we remember that He whose promises we know are forever sure, hath seid "af such is the kingdom of heaven," should we not ocuse to moorn? For why heaven the we not couse to mourn? For whiles of one when we know has only lies of one when we know liss only been match-ed from earth to glory? O what a pleasing thought, and what a source of consolation and even of joy shall it afford those parents when God in his inicrutable wisdom half seen proper thus to afflict; when they can look upward to-ward that blissful abode, and with uncering cer-tainty exclaim, "Our civild is there."

Yes there, on those bright flowery plains Where sarrows never come, Where God torcere lives and reigns, There is your infant's home.

And with that happy throng above, Her now enraptured soul Shall shoutiand sing redeeming lave, While endless ages rull.
